THE WESTBROOK Land and Timber Co. already has deeded access on the private road that runs through San Carlos Ranch (above) near the intersection of Robinson Canyon Road and Carmel Valley Road. The road will give logging trucks access to Carmel Valley Road if the company logs redwood trees south of San Carlos Ranch. The ranch consists of 20,000 acres south of southern ridge line of Carmel Valley. The timber harvest plan the company submitted already has been approved by the California Department of Forestry.

Carmel Valley Road could be redwood logging route by July

By JOE LIVERNOIS

CARMEL VALLEY ROAD could become a redwood logging truck route by July unless Monterey County officials can somehow convince the California Board of Forestry otherwise.

On July 1, the state will assume control of all timber operations, including operations in Carmel Valley and Big Sur which the county has not permitted in the past.

"At that point, the county will have no control, period," according to Bruce Boman, a Monterey County environmental planner.

"We're only advisory anymore," said Lynn Mounday, another planner from the Montlerey County Planning Department.

Monterey County officials, as well as the Carmel Valley Property Owners Association, clearly are angered by the state law that pre-empts county control of the local timber industry.

The law is so far-reaching, in fact, that counties apparently do not have an opportunity to limit logging truck access on their own roads.

In Carmel Valley, Westbrook Land and Timber Co. has California Department of Forestry approval of a timber harvest plan it submitted to remove about 350 redwood trees from about 75 of the 5,000 acres it owns up Williams Canyon south of the San Carlos Ranch.

However, Westbrook was forbidden to remove the trees when its use permit application before the Monterey County Board of Supervisors was turned down.

But under the new state law, the county is powerless to prevent the cut and the decision of a "timber czar" will prevail. Aside from its advisory role, Monterey County will have no say in future timber operations, including the use of county roads by logging trucks, Mounday said.

The forestry board will meet at 10 a.m. July 8 in the old Santa Clara County Supervisors Chambers on 70 W. Hedding St. in San Jose to determine what specific rules and regulations will apply to Monterey County under the new law. Access to county roads is expected to be one of the major issues for which the county will seek remedy.

Some of the existing rules are "nebulous," Boman said. "We're trying to define where, outside of the harvest property, the state control ends and county control picks up."

AT A CARMEL VALLEY Property Owners Association Board of Directors meeting June 8, director Mary Ann Matthews reported that the only apparent way to prevent logging trucks on Carmel Valley Road is if Arthur Oppenheimer, owner of the San Carlos Ranch property, prevented logging truck access through his property.

But David Soho, regional resource manager for the California Department of Forestry, told the Pine Cone/Outlook that Westbrook has "deeded access through San Carlos Road."

The only road from the redwood stand and Carmel Valley Road is a winding, narrow private road through San Carlos

Return our sand

Dear Editor:

Heavens! There's hardly room enough for a July Fourth riot; our beach is mostly gone. Who stole it? Who perpetuated this noisome crime? A conspiracy, no doubt; no single man could, by himself, have carted off those tons of sand.

Ah, there's the truth — of politicians come together in cabalistic crime. Only they would have the strength, combined, to steal our beach away.

To whom does the finger point? To those entrusted with our weal, who else? To Carmel's lady mayor, Mr. Peters of Valley fame, Sam Farr in distant Sacramento, our newly seated governor — partners joined in rank disdain of our public right.

As taxpayers, we humbly ask — nay, demand — the return of our precious sand. Muy pronto, por favor, else a riot be denied.

Thanks for swallows

Dear Editor:

A wealth of mis-information and bad press is doing a lot of damage.

One of our most valuable birds is being denied nesting opportunity in many areas. The swallow is a gentle bird who devours insects on the wing.

They are being accused of everything from causing termites in buildings to rare exotic disease in humans. All such tales are gross distortions. These birds eat insects such as flies, mosquitoes, aphids, flying ants, wasps, grasshoppers, spiders, beetles, leafhoppers, moths, crickets, and caterpillars. They do not carry disease, or cause termite damage.

Some swallows build mud nests on walls under eaves, and some people object to that and tear the nests down. Now some nests are being destroyed because of mis-information given on a television broadcast. It is well for the public to know that federal law protects birds, and it is against the law to destroy an active nest. You can be taken to court for such action.

If nests are likely to be built in an unsuitable location (from the human point of view), one can prevent the building by covering the area with plastic, or boarding up the eaves in that area. If nests have eggs or young, you must leave them until the young have flown before you destroy the nests. Why anyone would not want an insect eater around is puzzling to me. In this "year of the mosquito," be thankful for all the swallows there are!

It's only money

Dear Editor:

We are told that one of the biggest items in the federal budget is the interest payment on the national debt that now exceeds $1 trillion.

Foreign aid since World War II has accounted for much of that debt. There are reports that will lead the casual reader to believe that we have only given away $300 billion since 1945. (Only $300 billion?)

A more alarming report was recently released by the Library of Congress. In that report, we are told that the full cost of foreign aid since WW II, interest and all included, exceeds a mind-boggling $2.3 trillion. Can you believe it?

No wonder we pay such a heavy graduated income tax that grows ever heavier with each passing year!

Broken down to a per capita basis, one report tells us that, on a per capita basis, each of us owes an estimated $4,085 if we suddenly had to come up with our fair share of the debt.

That report tells us that back in 1910 the National Debt figured on a per capita basis was $12.41 per person.

In 1900, the national debt was $1.25 billion.

As we are made painfully aware each income tax time, our expert money managers have managed to increase the debt by more than 1,000 percent in the last 80 years. And it's really just gaining momentum! We're promised more taxes, not less.

But then, what the heck! It's only money! Throw it out in the yard, and the chickens won't even eat it.

Apology for letter

APOLOGY TO SENATOR FARR AND THE FORMER BIG CREEK OWNERS AND RETRACTION OF LETTER:

The Pine Cone regrets the publication of a letter on June 2, 1983, which contained untrue, malicious and defamatory remarks relating to former State Senator Fred Farr and his colleagues, the former owners of Big Creek in Big Sur.

The author of the letter remains unknown to the Pine Cone. We erroneously assumed that "S. Morse" was S.F.B. Morse III. Sam Morse has already refuted the letter as not of his thinking or origin. The letter should never have been published and we erred in doing so and apologize to Fred Farr and the other former owners of Big Creek, and retract the statements contained in said letter.

Senator Farr is not retired; he is a well-respected practicing Carmel lawyer. He ably served this county as its state senator from 1955 through 1966, and contributes time to community affairs.

The former owners of Big Creek are responsible for holding together, in its natural state, the land which is now a magnificent nature studies laboratory of the University of California.

When the former owners acquired Big Creek's 4,000 acres in the early 1960s, they recorded a scenic easement restricting all the frontal slopes of the property from development. When Big Creek was conveyed to The Nature Conservancy, the owners made generous stock contributions. Not one cent of public money was used in the acquisition cost of Big Creek.

Hopefully, this apology and retraction will clear the air and set the record straight.

Supervisor Peters' troubles continue to haunt his career

By ROBERT MISKIMON

SUPERVISOR William Peters' political troubles continue to worsen.

Just when Peters had gotten into the habit of saying publicly that he had been vindicated of charges of wrongdoing in connection with his conduct as a member of the Monterey County Planning Commission, he now faces the possibility of a new trial on those charges or a costly appeal to the California Supreme Court.

Monterey County Dist. Atty. William Curtis prevailed last week in his argument before an appeals court that a grave procedural error was committed by a visiting judge when the Peters trial was conducted in 1981.

Appellate jurors ordered a new trial on those civil charges and set aside a ruling to award Peters some $38,000 in legal fees at the expense of Monterey County taxpayers.

The original charge against Peters — contained in a civil lawsuit against the Fifth District supervisor brought by the district attorney — was that he had failed accurately and completely to disclose his economic interests on required reports as a member of the planning commission from 1977 to 1980.

When visiting Superior Court Judge William Fredman of San Luis Obispo found Peters innocent of the charges in the civil suit pertaining to those issues two years ago, the Carmel Valley supervisor claimed that decision represented "complete, 100 percent exoneration from all charges."

From a political and human point of view, it's not difficult to imagine the great sense of relief and rejuvenation which that decision must have brought Peters. Indeed, it appeared for many months after that decision that Peters had put the worst of his political and legal problems behind himself and was on the road to renewed self-confidence. At times, his demeanor was downright arrogant.

The only thing wrong was that a lot of people weren't believing the "image" presented by Bill Peters. Many citizens wanted a closer scrutiny of the issues involved in the lawsuit, and particularly some real clarification of his financial interests and connections with the Carmel Valley Ranch development.

Now, it appears that these issues once and for all be resolved. If Peters has the funds may the resolve to carry this decision to the California Supreme Court, that resolution may be in the distant future.

If a new trial is ordered in Monterey County Superior Court and the district attorney's investigating officer's allowed to participate in the prosecution of the case — a right denied in the original trial—then the resolution will be closer at hand and may produce some more immediate effects on Supervisor Peters' political career.

The appeals court decision to order a new trial and to deny Peters his legal expenses should come as good news to everyone concerned about fairness and due process in the legal and political arena, not just to foes of Peters.

That is, to everyone except Supervisor Peters himself.

Limestone mining risk

Dear Editor:

The subject of limestone mining at Pico Blanco will be debated when the Board of Supervisors resumes hearings on the Big Sur Local Coastal Program.

This mountain is a scenic landmark on the Big Sur coast, and is visible from both Highway 1 and from recreational trails in the Los Padres Forest. A quarry has already been opened on the Southern slope of Pico Blanco in the National Forest, and is visible from the ridge at Molera Park. Road work in connection with the quarry has caused silting of the steelhead habitat in the Little Sur river, which is a protected waterway.

Large Scale mining would have far-reaching effects. It would pose a threat to wildlife. There would be scarring of the hillside. There would be noise from heavy machinery and blasting.

Transportation of limestone would involve either trucking or a conveyor belt leading to facilities for shipping by sea, both detrimental to a superb recreational area enjoyed by people from all over the world.

The limestone is not worth the destruction.

Quality local chocolate

Dear Editor:

In response to "chocolate lover," as mentioned in the June 9 Business Beat, we wonder if Mr. Lajigian checked the candy stores in Carmel before making such a statement as "not being able to find fine quality candy here."

Pete Robotti of Hansel and Gretel candy store not only makes his high quality chocolates and other candies on the premises but also, for various holidays, makes specialty items such as Santa Claus, Christmas wreaths, candy canes, Easter rabbits, chocolate and marshmallow eggs, St. Patrick's novelties, and many other candy novelties throughout the year.

This business began 40 years ago on Ocean Avenue and Pete and Mary Robotti have been at their present location on Sixth between Dolores and Lincoln for 19 years as owners. We think any business that has been in operation for the last 40 years must be doing something right.

The quality of candy that comes from Hansel and Gretel in our opinion makes it unnecessary to import candy from Germany, Switzerland, Italy, The Netherlands, or San Francisco.

City council wants some answers about Carmel Youth Center

By MICHAEL GARDNER

HOW WELL does the Carmel Youth Center serve the needs of youth? It depends on who you talk to.

"We would like to see the youth center function for the youth of the community. If it is — fine. If it isn't, then the council has the right to ask why," says Councilman David Maradei.

"We're a private club. Why should we go with them? We're always willing to help. The city changes; we don't. First thing they'll do is the adults are in and the kids will be out," says Carmel Youth Center Director Jack Giles.

The primary purpose of a 12 p.m., June 21 Carmel City City Council tour of the youth center is to see what activities are offered and possibly solicit participation by the center in an area-wide recreation program. Discussion of the tour is not specifically listed on the subsequent 7:30 p.m. agenda that evening.

The council — admittedly not fully informed of all the youth center activities — questions whether the youth center is doing its job.

Although the private, non-profit youth center is not directly tied to the city purse strings, it does receive a financial windfall from a $1 per year lease on the property at the southwest corner of Fourth Street and Torres Avenue.

The building itself is owned by the youth center, but will revert to city ownership if the lease contract is not extended in 1989.

Area youth up to the age of 21 pay $1 per year for membership to the youth center. The youth center has a pool table, ping pong table, video game, wide screen television and snack bar. There are also several dances yearly and members participated in the recent Carmel Christmas Tree lighting ceremony.

'It's been a mystery up there all these years. I haven't been particularly concerned with it and maybe I should be,' he said. 'It just seems to me to be a secret on what goes on up there, but it doesn't annoy me. It just concerns me.'

The center is open every day, but the hours vary and there are few structured activities, which is the way the board of directors likes it.

The youth center is entirely self-supporting with most of its funds raised from "Bingmobile" snack sales at major events such as Laguna Seca auto races and the Bing Crosby Pro-Am Golf Tournament.

As the paid director, Jack Giles serves under a board of directors, which meets sporadically to create policies and guidelines. Giles also has two part-time paid staff members.

The council, because it owns the land, believes the youth center should be open to more activities to be offered by the proposed city recreational program.

BUT THE youth center operates independently from the city and likes it that way. There is opposition to any participation in city events.

A city program would squeeze youths out of the center because of the demand for adult-oriented activities, Giles believes.

"First thing they'll do is the adults are in and the kids will be out," he said.

"We don't pay any attention to the city council. They don't have anything to do with us," Giles said.

Giles said the city is in no position to tell the youth center about activities when the past three councils have failed to enact a recreation program.

"Did you ever see a town without a playground?" he asked rhetorically.

Robert Updike, vice president of the center board of directors, is opposed to any city recreational program that would open the center up to adult use.

"It really depends on the recreational program and what the city has proposed. It's going to be used for kids, or nothing," said Updike, who is also the Carmel fire chief.

The youth center still offers most of the same programs it offered in the 1950s when it was the "in" spot for teenagers, Updike said.

"The youth center has been offering everything that it's been offering for the past 30 years," he said. "Kids get what they want to get out of it. You can't force them to use it."

The center used to sponsor baseball games at Sunset Center, but now the lot is filled with cars and the field is too rocky and bumpy to play on anyway, Updike pointed out.

The number of dances has also decreased because of cost and complaints from neighbors, he said.

Cost of the bands used to be about $150 a night and admission would be $1, a price that was within most teens' budgets, Updike said.

Now, band costs have increased to about $700 a night, which means the center would have to charge at least $4 to $5 for a ticket. Because it's light until about 9 p.m., the youths do not arrive until then. And, neighbors' complaints about the noise have forced the center to end the dances at 11 p.m., Updike added.

When the council tours the youth center June 21, it hopes to obtain an explanation on how it works, what activities are offered and why certain programs are no longer available.

'WE NEED to know what is going on and what services the city is getting out of the property," Council member Helen Arnold said. "I don't think we're getting full utilization out of the building for the youth."

Councilman Robert Stephenson agrees: "I don't know hat's going on over at the youth center and that's why I want to go over there. I would like to see something constructive come out of the youth center."

Asked if he thinks the center does not offer enough programs, Stephenson replied: "I don't know. If they're not doing anything over there, yes it's time for a change. If they have a good program, perhaps they should just carry on. I just plain don't know.

'We don't pay any attention to the city council. They don't have anything to do with us,' Giles said.

"It's been a mystery up there all these years. I haven't been particularly concerned with it and maybe I should be," he said. "It just seems to me to be a secret on what goes on up there, but it doesn't annoy me. It just concerns me."

Stephenson is uncertain about what the results will be of the council tour.

"It depends on what we find. We may just scratch the surface. My impression, without much foundation, is that it's a unique clique. I can't prove that. That's why I'd like to have a tour. It may end up to be more than an inspection. It may be an investigation," Stephenson continued.

"I've had many comments from within the community about how the youth center used to be a central point for young people," Councilman David Maradei said. Apparently that has not happened now.

"We would like to see the youth center function for the youth of the community. If it is, fine. If it isn't, the council has the right to ask why."

The center has not been as active as it should be, Councilman Frank Lloyd said.

"It's been very inactive for a long time. We have quite an investment (the land) up there and all we get is $1 a year and no control. I'm pretty burned up at the whole thing," Lloyd said.

Mayor Charlotte Townsend said she wants the tour to get more information about the youth center activities.

"I am not really fully informed. I don't understand how the youth center operates," she said. "I have heard some complaints that it's under-used. That's the major one."

"It does seem to me that if we're going to have a recreation program, it would seem logical to involve the youth center," the mayor added.

FORMER COUNCILMAN Howard Brunn criticized the youth center operations when its lease was renewed for 20 years in 1969.

Today, he still questions whether the youth center is doing its job.

"There's always been a tremendous need for the youth center. We need a triangle of the school district, the city and the youth center to work together to create a dynamic program," Brunn told the Pine Cone/ Outlook last week. "The main hangup to that is the board of directors of the youth center."

The city is justified in thinking that the center needs to offer more programs.

"The time has come for the youth center to update its operations. They need a young professional to work with Jack Giles and use the benefit of all of his years of vast ex-

JACK GILES, director of the youth center, is hesitant to get involved in city activities because he's afraid the adults will take over and the kids will have no place to go.

BETTE HINTON, who helped prepare decorations for a June 17 dance at the Carmel Youth Center, commended the center on its cooperation with the high school.

CHESTER HARE and Brendan Ramsden played the free video game at the youth center during a recent foggy afternoon.

SUSIE FAIA (left) said the kids need to be "redirected" to the activities at the Carmel Youth Center. The center lost a lot of its popularity in the 1970s when the youngsters became disinterested in the types of events it offered, she said.

State may allow redwood logging

Ranch.

The new state forestry bill, Senate Bill 856, was approved by the state legislature in 1982.

Steve Slade, administrative assistant to Fifth District Supervisor William Peters, told CVPOA directors the county "did everything we could to defeat the bill. We just got beat by those who wanted to eliminate county rule over timber operations."

The new law allows counties to recommend policies to the state forestry board which "take local concerns into account," Soho said.

Soho will be the "designee" of the state forestry director who will make decisions on timber harvest plan applications submitted in Monterey County.

But every regulation Monterey County has recommended which could prevent the removal of redwoods south of the San Carlos Ranch has been turned down by the board.

"So far, we have not had much success," Slade said. "Every time we come up with another angle, the state shoots it down."

"For instance, once we would have had a time limit on when the trucks could be on Carmel Valley Road. Now there is a timber czar who makes those decisions."

Westbrook officials also have filed a timber harvest plan to remove oak trees for commercial fuel wood on about 70 acres on their property.

Monterey County supervisors have asked the forestry board to remove commercial hardwoods, such as oaks, from the list of trees over which the county would lose jurisdiction.

On June 7, the Monterey County Board of Supervisors directed its county counsel and Mounday to draft an ordinance which would include rules the county can use to regulate commercial or land-clearing oak tree cuts in Monterey County.

"The board agreed it should have an oak tree ordinance in our back pocket that would give us some control in case the forestry board gives us jurisdiction over oaks," Mounday said.

It may be too late for Monterey County officials or Carmel Valley residents to stop the redwood cut south of Carmel Valley. Westbrook's timber harvest plan already has been approved by the forestry board and the new state rules and regulations 'won't apply retroactively to permits already approved,' Mounday said.

BUT SOHO TOLD the Pine Cone/Outlook that the supervisors' request is open for interpretation and the forestry board is expected to discuss it further next month.

The forestry board will also consider a forestry department recommendation to move Monterey County from the "southern district" to the "central coast district" of the state forestry department regional scheme.

Soho said the rules and regulations that apply to the central coast district are more strict than those that apply to the southern district.

It may be too late for Monterey County officials or Carmel Valley residents to stop the redwood cut south of Carmel Valley. Westbrook's timber harvest plan already has been approved by the forestry board and the new state rules and regulations "won't apply retroactively to permits already approved," Mounday said.

But for timber harvest plans adopted after July 1, the new state law allows the board of supervisors or the planning commission for any county to request a public hearing on any timber harvest plan submitted for lands within the county.

But every regulation Monterey County has recommended which could prevent the removal of redwoods south of the San Carlos Ranch has been turned down by the board.

The forestry board must conduct a public hearing if one is requested before it takes any action on the timber harvest plan.

Mounday stressed that if local residents want their concerns voiced before the forestry board, they should speak up at the forestry board hearing in San Jose July 8.

He also noted that the forestry board has taken exception to the Monterey County request to exclude logging trucks from Carmel Valley Road during commute hours.

But Mounday said the natural traffic patterns during commute hours on Carmel Valley Road and Highway 1 will limit truck traffic anyway.

"If it takes the truckers five times longer to inch through traffic, I'm sure they will time their schedules to avoid it," he said.

County gives visiting mothers-in-law a handy 'trump card'

THE MONTEREY COUNTY Planning Commission provided a trump card for mothers-in-law who visit but never leave when it dispensed with its recommended zoning ordinance amendments to permit "granny housing."

Under the planning commission's recommended granny housing plan, which the Monterey County Planning Department calls "cottage dwellings," county property zoned "R-1" for single-family residential homes may be used to provide another unit for persons at least 60 years old. A county use permit would be needed.

A planning commission committee approved of the zoning amendments with a number of conditions May 25.

But some committee members were not without a bit of trepidation about the amendments.

In a report to the planning commission, Commissioner Gary Varga of Carmel reported that members discussed a "number of philosophical issues," including "whether adoption of a cottage dwelling ordinance would have the effect of changing R-1 zoned districts into duplex districts. It was recognized that there is a tension between encouragement of new rental housing and the need to preserve the quality of life in existing single-family neighborhoods."

The granny housing ordinance recommended to the Monterey County Board of Supervisors is "tailored to assist persons aged 60 and over" and attempts to thwart applications for "speculative motives," according to Varga.

Specifically, it limits the creation of a second unit in an R-1 zone for habitation by persons 60 years of age and older. It also stipulates that owners of proposed granny houses should reside on the site at the time of the use permit application.

The planning commission recommendation also suggests that only one dwelling unit needs to be occupied by a person 60 years of age and older and that the parcel owner may reside in either dwelling. The exterior square footage of any separate cottage used for granny housing cannot exceed 700 sq. ft.

'SUCH A PROVISION is intended to allow so-called 'empty-nesters' to move into the smaller dwelling unit and thus allow larger-family utilization of the main dwelling," Varga said.

The planning commission ordinance also requires that no less than one on-site parking space for each senior citizen unit be provided.

Senior citizen units will not be permitted on parcels of less than two acres in areas not served by public sewer systems "unless the applicant can demonstrate to the planning commission by substantial evidence that there will be no direct or cumulative adverse effect to the health, welfare or safety of the surrounding neighborhood," Varga said.

Monterey County Environmental Sanitarian Walter Wong suggested the two-acre condition be added to the ordinance to provide for enough space for two septic tanks and drain field systems.

The planning commission also recommended that the county ordinance reflect a state law that says a granny home can not be counted as a single unit when total buildout figures are included in general plans.

Instead, the county ordinance states that the two units on one parcel should be counted as one unit in buildout numbers, according to Varga.

Monterey Commissioner Tom Mill was the only dissenter among the eight commissioners who voted on the proposed granny housing ordinance.

He maintained that no age limit should be included in the ordinance.

Varga said that among the "philosophical issues" the committee discussed was "whether the proposed ordinance should be limited to persons at least 60 years old in light of the fact that younger people may also have financial constraints which might be alleviated by (the) availability of cottage dwellings."

He suggested the commission consider dropping the age limit "after sufficient time has transpired to achieve an experience factor with the ordinance."

The planning commission also ordered a subsequent environmental impact report for a Pebble Beach Co. proposal to build a golf course, condominiums and homes at Spanish Bay.

Rev. Fosse is new All Saints' rector

The Rev. Robert E. Fosse, rector of the Church of the Epiphany in Flagstaff, Ariz. for 16 years, is the new rector of All Saints' Parish in Carmel. He was chosen by unanimous vote of the Vestry on Sunday, May 8. Father Fosse will assume his duties Aug. 1.

All Saints' rectorship has been vacant since August of 1982 when the Rev. David Hill resigned after 24 years of service. The Rt. Rev. George Masuda, retired Bishop of North Dakota, who had been interim rector since September, left the parish May 29. The Rev. Keith Andrews, assistant rector, will fill the place, assisted by several retired clergy, until Fr. Fosse arrives.

Fr. Fosse (whose name is pronounced "Foss") is 46 years old. He and his wife Margaret (Peggy) have three sons: Robert Jr., John and Carey. The two older sons are students at the University of Southern California. The youngest, graduating from high school this spring, will enter the university in the fall.

Fr. Fosse was born in Seattle, Wash., on Oct. 6, 1936. He graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree from Dartmouth College, Hanover, N.H. in 1958 and received the degree of Master of Sacred Theology from Berkeley Divinity School, Yale University in 1961.

How well does Youth Center serve youth?

perience," Brunn continued. "The time has come to spring forward to the 20th Century."

Brunn is highly critical of the current youth center operation. "They do zero. They run a business. Frankly, that place is just over the hill."

The youth center should become involved in a city recreation program, said Ken White, who is chairman of the city recreation program committee and president of the Carmel Unified School District Board of Education.

"In the last few years, they've really improved their operations with the parent group-sponsored dances and other activities," White said.

The youth center has always helped parent groups with the dances and use of the Bingmobiles for school fund raisers, he added.

"It's our hope that we can expand now. I'd like to see cooperation and I think we can. They have a good program and I think we can work things out," White said.

Three parents who talked to the Pine Cone/Outlook expressed support of the youth center. They said it has been cooperative with projects and offers a variety of programs for youths.

The Padre Parents Club raised funds through the use of the Bingmobile at the Laguna Seca races recently and and the center was the site of a high school seniors' casino night June 10, explained Anne Roberts, president of the Padre Parents Club.

Mrs. Roberts belives it is the youth and the center that need changing.

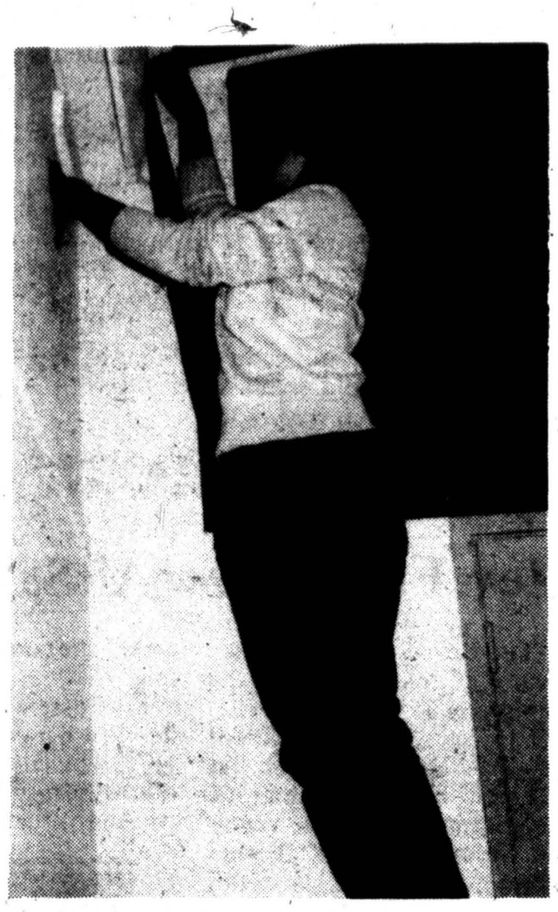
"I think the problem is redirecting the youth to use the facility. The reputation is not the one it had years ago. It was the 'in' place to go and now it isn't. We need it to be 'in' again," she said.

SUSIE FAIA, who met her husband Ron at a youth center dance, agrees with Mrs. Roberts.

"I think maybe the 1970s happened. Kids were going in a different direction. Kids were not interested in the things we were," she explained.

But the new generation appears to be interested in the kinds of activities a youth center can provide, she added.

"They like to dance, to get together. They have school spirit," she said.



NIKKI KAYE helped decorate the youth center for the high school senior's "casino night" held June 17.

Mrs. Faia pointed out that a dance class will be offered from 5 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. Wednesdays through the summer. It is an example of the changing direction of the center.

The youth center does need to offer more activities, she believes.

"I would like to see it brought back to life. It's been dormant. There have just been a few people who use it frequently," she explained. "The other part is the youth center plant itself. It's a wonderful spot. I would like to see it used. I think we need to start over."

Bette Hinton, former president of the Carmel High School Boosters Club, pointed out that the youth center is one of the few places for kids in Carmel.

"It's the only thing in the whole city other than Carmel Youth Baseball that has anything to do with kids," she said. "I think the youth center is really going to be a place that is going to be reactivated.

"The city hasn't done anything. At least we have something here," Mrs. Hinton pointed out.

Swim coach to speak on 'World of Aquatics'

Bob Walthour, Carmel High School swimming coach, will speak on "The World of Aquatics" at the annual dinner meeting of the Carmel-by-the-Sea Chapter of the American Red Cross, June 28.

Walthour has coached the girls' varsity swimming team to 110 wins out of 111 matches, at last count, and has been a certified American Red Cross small craft and sailing instructor since 1971. In 1974, he served as dean of instruction in the Red Cross' National Sailing and Small Craft School.

Malthour's family is active in swimming. His children — Kathy, Chrissy and Bob — and his wife Joan are almost as involved as their father, and all are certified Red Cross swimming instructors.

Coach Walthour will speak at the meeting Tuesday, June 28 in the Sunset Room at La Playa Hotel. A no-host cocktail house at 6 p.m. will precede the dinner at 7 p.m. The public is invited. Reservations should be made at the chapter no later than June 21.

Valley synagogue plans are endorsed by county

PLANS TO BUILD a synagogue on the old Quintel Evergreen Farm in Carmel Valley were endorsed June 9 by the Monterey County Zoning Administrator.

The decision by zoning administrator Robert Slimmon allows members of Congregation Beth Israel to begin work on a 6,100 sq. ft. building on 2.7 acres west of San Carlos Road on Carmel Valley Road.

Slimmon said that no opposition to the proposed synagogue surfaced at his hearing in the Monterey County Courthouse last week, but that letters from neighbors and an appearance by neighbor David McMillan expressed concerns that access to the synagogue from Carmel Valley Road could be a problem.

Slimmon responded with a condition to his approval which requires the congregation to build a deceleration lane next to the eastbound lane of traffic for right turns into the synagogue. It also requires a left-turn channelization lane on the westbound route if required by the Monterey County Department of Public Works.

Before the congregation could seek county approval of the project, it had to obtain a blessing from Monterey County Superior Court.

On Jan. 28, Judge Robert O'Farrell determined that the synagogue would have little effect on the population density or building intensity of Carmel Valley.

A Superior Court-ordered moratorium on discretionary building permits has been in effect in Carmel Valley since 1979 and will continue until the Carmel Valley Master Plan is revised and readopted.

Also last week, the Monterey County Planning Commission agreed to form a subcommittee to review the Big Sur and Little Sur rivers watershed management plans that will be incorporated into the Big Sur Land Use Plan.

The action followed a public hearing and the committee is scheduled to report on their findings July 13.

Commissioners on the committee include Peter Cailotto of Salinas, Lynn Riddle of North County and David Hendricks of Pebble Beach.

THE MONTEREY COUNTY Board of Supervisors agreed last week to amend its resolution of support for a proposed dam on the Arroyo Seco river so that "all Arroyo Seco Dam alternatives be given equal study."

The amendment was needed, according to Robert Whiting, district engineer for the Monterey County Flood Control and Water Conservation District, because the county needs to "put to rest fears by some that we may only intend to look seriously at the Pools site."

An earlier board resolution calls for the Pools site to be the "primary alternative" for a dam.

But another proposed site further downstream, called the "Greenfield site," would not back water up in the resulting reservoir into federal forestry lands as the Pools site would.

Ed Foley, a King City resident and a member of the Ventana Chapter of the Sierra Club, told the supervisors the Sierra Club "is happy to see the focus move from the Pools site. We will never change our opposition of the Pools site."

Whiting told the supervisors in a memo that he feels the board action "will not have a significant bearing on the planning studies, since we intend to study both sites equally anyway in the environmental impact report" for the dam project.

Fifth District Supervisor William Peters said the action clarifies the board position to mean that the supervisors support an EIR that seeks a "water project, rather than just a dam project."

He said the EIR could come up with alternative projects that could produce water "in a combination" with the dam project.

Peters also suggested the county draft a document that answers concerns about the project.

For instance, he said the board of supervisors has always maintained the bond project for the dam would be submitted to county voters "but our position on that has never been written down anyplace."

World Affairs Council meets

The World Affairs Council is scheduled to meet at 4:30 p.m. Thursday, June 16 in the Morse Auditorium of the Monterey Institute of International Studies, 425 Van Buren St., Monterey.

Fisher served for many years as a Foreign Service Officer in the Department of State. His assignments were mostly in Latin America but he also saw service in Washington, D.C., the Philippines and at the United Nations General Assembly.

Fisher has taught at the Foreign Service Institute in Washington, D.C., the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy and the Georgetown School of Foreign Service. He was a consultant speaker for the United States Information Agency on problems of international communication and news flow and has recently returned from East Asia, where he spoke in Japan, Korea, Taiwan and Malaysia for the Information Agency. JUDGES AND SPECTATORS bundled up early June 11 for the Surfabout competition on Carmel Beach. Carmel Police Chief Jack McGilvray said the crowd never exceeded more than 1,000 people.

COMPETITION on Carmel Beach was limited to surfing during the Surfabout contest last weekend. Surfabout organizers had hoped to have a bikini contest to "broaden participation" in the event, but Carmel city officials eliminated the swimsuit competition because they worried hordes of people would show up and further desecrate the badly-eroded banks of the beach.

Surfabout event comes and goes peacefully

By JOE LIVERNOIS

THE 'CRUD' APPARENTLY stayed away from Carmel Beach last weekend, though young women in bikinis did not.

Carmel city fathers and mothers spent a good portion of last week worrying about the "type of crud" a bikini contest on Carmel Beach would attract and the effect a large crowd would have on the badly-eroded banks of the beach.

The bikini contest was a late promotional addition to the fourth annual Carmel Beach Surfabout, an event promoter Brad Johnson said he hoped would "broaden the participation" at the surf contest.

But the Carmel Business License Code and Review Board June 9 ordered Johnson to eliminate the bikini contest.

After the meeting, license review board member Sandy Swain admonished Johnson and told him, "You know the kind of crud (a bikini contest) will attract."

License review board members were so incensed with the bikini contest, which was not mentioned when Johnson sought Surfabout approval from the review board two weeks earlier, that they narrowly defeated a motion to eliminate the entire weekend event.

'There was so much flak this year that it seemed like it was kind of not worth it,' he said. 'I thought for a while we ought to go somewhere where it would be welcome.

The motion to scrap the Surfabout, which was defeated by a 4-3 vote, was made by Carmel City Administrator Douglas Schmitz.

Schmitz said he has been told by coastal engineers that the city should do everything possible to discourage large crowds on Carmel Beach for at least one year, until the city can repair the badly-eroded banks between the beach and Scenic Drive.

The Surfabout and bikini contest were widely promoted on two local radio stations and the city was concerned that hordes of people would descend onto Carmel Beach.

But Carmel Police Chief Jack McGilvray and Ms. Swain had nothing but praise for the contest Monday morning.

"I thought Brad really did a good job," Ms. Swain said.

In fact, the surfers' presence may have saved a few lives, according to Dr. James Hughes, a Pacific Grove dentist and head of the Pacific Grove Marine Rescue Patrol.

Surfers apparently paddled out to four divers who became exhausted when they tried to swim against a riptide about 1 p.m. Sunday.

"It was very fortunate they were there to assist them immediately," Hughes said. "The situation was nasty enough that something bad could have happened."

FORREST MIDDLETON, a Pacific Grove surfer, was the first on the scene and Johnson said Middleton pulled three of the divers out personally.

Three others surfers, including Chip Lykins, Scott Lundy and Michael Curtice, also assisted in the incident that took place about one-quarter mile from the site of the Surfabout competition.

Richard Schmidt, a Santa Cruz lifeguard and a judge at the Surfabout, left the judges' table in the middle of the long board competition and also assisted, Johnson said.

All five of the divers were treated at the scene and refused transport to the hospital.

McGilvray said that no more than 1,000 persons were on the beach where the Surfabout was underway at any one time during the weekend.

But despite assurances from Johnson that the event would be, as always, well organized and the crowd would be controlled, the license review board was not easily swayed.

Board members were particularly concerned that no mention of the bikini contest was made when Johnson first sought approval two weeks earlier.

"The programs you've put on in the past few years have been good," said Assistant Carmel Fire Chief Vern Allred. "But you've expanded on us."

City Administrator Schmitz said he was concerned the promotion would turn a small community event into a "big business."

After the event, Johnson told the Pine Cone/Outlook he "can see what their concerns were. They were legitimate concerns but they just took it further than it had to go. I thought they kept forgetting we had any track record, that we've always run a good event."

Johnson was told by several business license review board members that they would keep a careful eye on the event this year in view of Johnson's future efforts to have the Surfabout.

McGilvray said that based on the conduct of the crowd this year, he would recommend the Surfabout next year, as long as the beach banks are in better shape.

Johnson said he will ask the city for permission to hold the event again next year.

'THERE WAS SO much flak this year that it seemed like it was kind of not worth it," he said. "I thought for a while we ought to go somewhere where it would be welcome.

"But Carmel Beach is the best place for it." He said the waves are best on Carmel Beach this time of year.

And the bikini contest?

"We'll still continue to have it, though probably not at the beach," he said.

The finals of the bikini contest this year will be June 17 in a Monterey restaurant.

There are, incidentally, "a number of Carmel girls" who have qualified as bikini contest finalists, Johnson said.

The winner of the bikini contest will win two airline tickets to Hawaii.

Johnson said he was urged by several persons to "make an issue" about the city-imposed elimination of the bikini contest but added that "it never entered my mind" because it "has always been my intention to cooperate with the city."

CARMEL CITY OFFICIALS worried that the Surfabout competition last weekend would attract crowds that would edge past warning signs and climb down portions of the beach bank already badly eroded by the winter storms. Some spectators did get past the 40 "beach monitors" who attempted to stop those who tried to make the perilous climb, however, though city public works officials said they caused little damage. City appeals fund denial for Carmel Beach repair

By JOE LIVERNOIS

CARMEL OFFICIALS HAVE appealed to the Federal Emergency Management Administration to reverse a denial of about half of the federal funds sought to repair storm-damaged Carmel Beach.

City Administrator Douglas Schmitz told the Carmel Forestry Commission June 9 that FEMA officials denied about $200,000 in grants because the city did not meet a FEMA schedule for restorative work.

The city has asked the federal agency for grants to fund three-quarters of the $450,000 worth of damage on the beach caused by severe winter storms. Of that, $200,000 was sought to cover the cost for the city to replace riprap to stabilize the banks of the beach, Schmitz said.

But because the riprap was not replaced within a period of time specified by FEMA regulations, federal officials informed the city that the agency would deny the $200,000 grant.

Schmitz said the city consciously avoided hauling in riprap during the FEMA time period because the ground beneath Scenic Drive was too moist and unstable to allow heavy trucks.

He said he is optimistic the denial will be overturned.

The forestry commission also learned from Schmitz during its special meeting last week that FEMA only will pay the city for restorative work, or work that would bring the beach back to its "original" state before the storms.

City officials, including forestry commissioners, agree that the best way to "repair" the beach is to maintain long-term management that responds to the changing force of nature. If the beach is merely "restored" to its original state, future storms similar to winter storms could result in similar trouble, forestry commissioners said.

Gary Kelly, acting city forester, said he believes the city "may have to look at the beach on a never-ending management plan basis. The natural factors along the beach are always changing. We ought to be able to roll with Mother Nature to preserve and protect it."

That will cost money, Schmitz said. Money that will not come from FEMA.

"That $450,000 puts the beach back the way it was," Schmitz said. "But we know that along certain points of the bluff, that's not enough. We know we should stabilize Scenic Drive."

HE SAID THE city would have to build new walls and drop more riprap to stabilize the bluff.

"When you're looking at numbers, that nearly doubles" the $450,000, he said. "When you add the walkway (along Scenic Drive), you're looking at $1 million."

"I hope the city budget process realizes it's going to take quite an expenditure of reserves to fix the beach," said forestry Commissioner Robert Evans.

And Barney Laiolo, former Carmel mayor, said he believes "$1 million isn't going to do all that is necessary."

Evans told Schmitz he wondered whether the restorative work FEMA will fund could be coordinated with the type of work needed for long-term protection of the beach bluff and Scenic Drive.

"Do we take the federal money and do something we don't want to do or what?" he asked.

Schmitz said the city has decided to approach beach restoration as a two-step process.

The "intermediate" project includes the planning, engineering and design of the beach restoration, as well as a public information efforts to educate residents and visitors about the precarious condition of the beach bluff and Scenic Drive, he said.

Also, the city public works department has been authorized to repair the stairway on Eighth Street, he said.

The long-term project includes placement of riprap and/or walls, the reconstruction of other more seriously damaged stairways, construction of a walkway along Scenic Drive and landscape and drainage work.

Commissioner Matt Smith asked Schmitz "what is likely to be accomplished between now and October," the start of the next rain season.

"We can't answer that right now," Schmitz said.

He said he solicited advice from four coastal engineers and the city has been host to FEMA officials on five separate occasions.

Two of the three commercial coastal engineers he has consulted said that reconstruction of the beach would be too large a task for them to handle but that they would continue consulting the city for free.

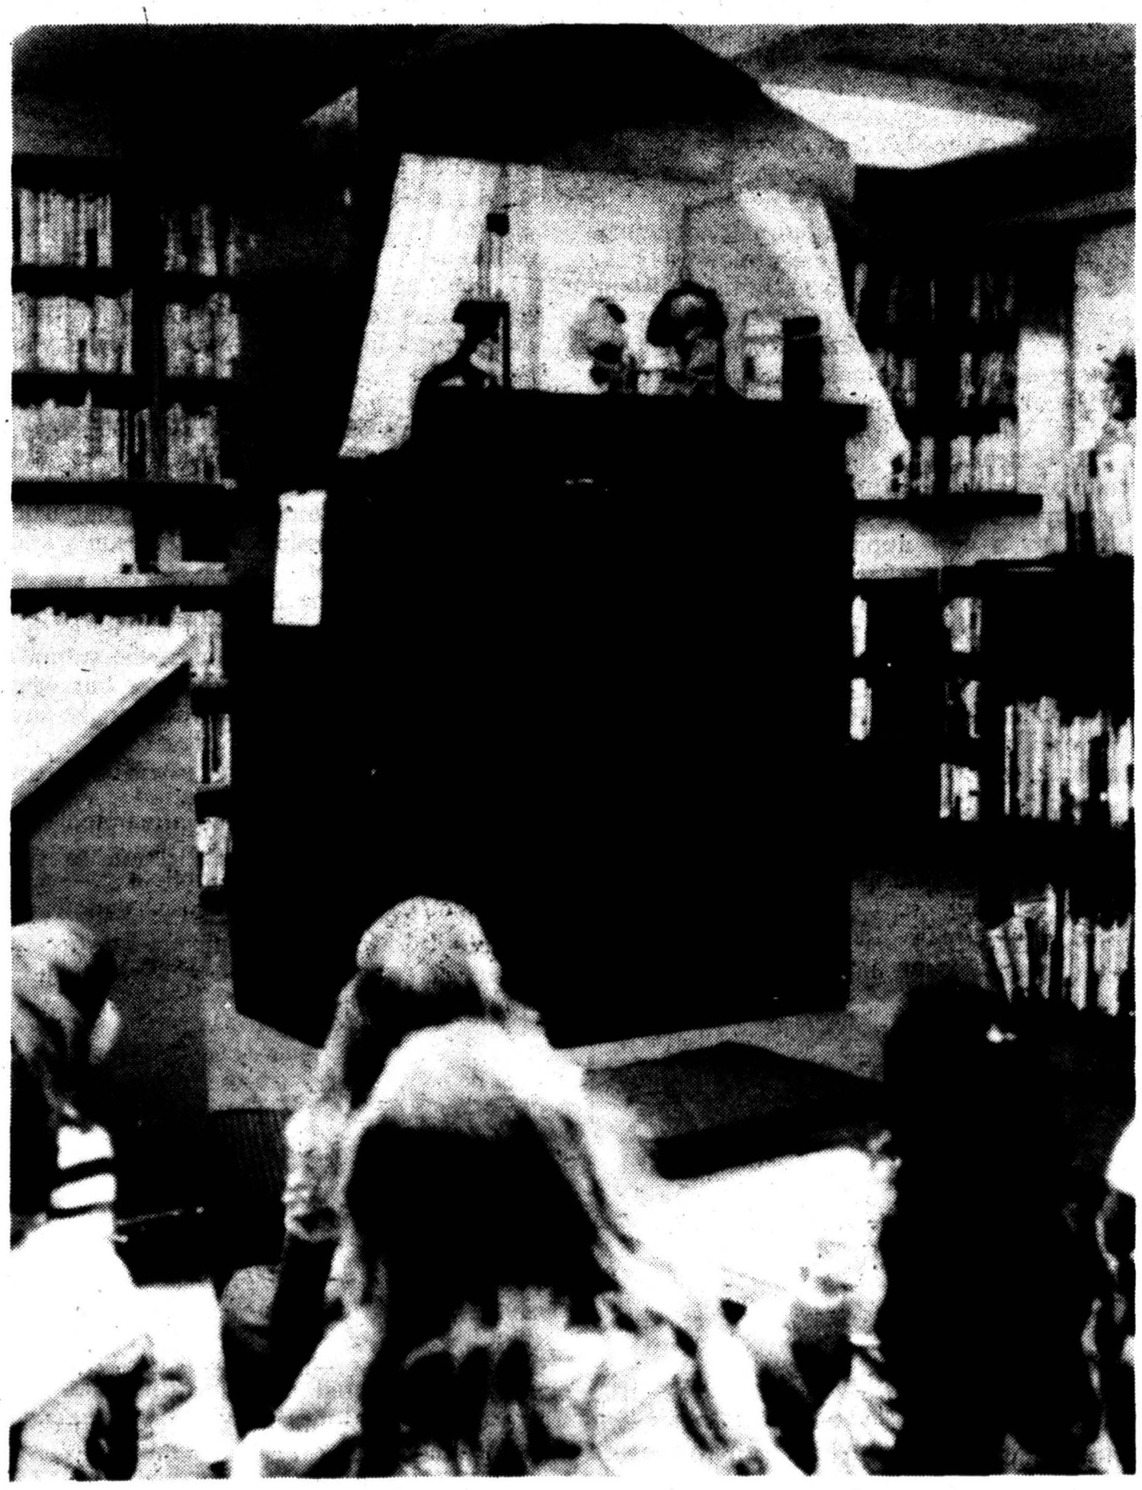
ANOTHER ENGINEER, David Shauman, recently saved the Monterey Dunes colony in the Moss Landing area from damage during the winter storms with his work, Schmitz said.

He said the primary problem during the winter storms was the combination of the 14 natural underground springs between Eighth and 13th streets which backed up and pushed the beach banks outwards, while the extreme high tides battered the banks from the west.

Smith said the enormity of the task to rehabilitate the beach "scares" him and asked Schmitz if he is equally scared.

"I'm not afraid of what's the most appropriate means to go," Schmitz said. "I have hesitancy, though, in the possibility of not getting support from the public."

He said all the consulting coastal engineers have told him the city must do everything possible to seek public comment on the future of the beach. On the other hand, "we will have to move expeditiously and I'm afraid someone will think they have been left out of the process."



City officials worry about library annex

By JOE LIVERNOIS

CARMEL CITY OFFICIALS said Tuesday they are still worried about the annual operating costs of the proposed $1 million Harrison Memorial Library annex.

The Carmel City Council discussed future funding needs of two library buildings when it met June 14 in Carmel City Hall.

The council did approve an appropriation of $315,000 for the library in its 1983-84 budget. In fact, the council is within one issue — an $8,000 item to stage the winning script of the Festival of Firsts playwright competition — of adoption of the entire $5.7 million municipal budget.

But with groundbreaking for the annex scheduled in only three months, the city council told the Harrison Memorial Library Board of Trustees it wants assurances from the library board that the city won't face half-million dollar annual expenditures to keep the library afloat in the future.

The council agreed to meet with the library board within several weeks to discuss what Councilman David Maradei called "these fundamental issues."

Maradei said he does not "want to be put in the position of opposing the library. I would like to see (the annex) succeed but I don't think (the library board) has the money to assure success."

The library annex, which would be located on the northwest corner of Lincoln Street and Sixth Avenue, would be built with $1 million the library board has accumulated from gifts and interest in its endowment fund.

But the annual operating costs of the annex has the city council worried, especially now that other revenue sources are limited. Maradei called the library annex a potential "growing drain on city funds."

To meet those costs, Maradei said fundraising "should become a fundamental commitment of the library board."

LIBRARY BOARD members told Maradei they fully intend to seek new money from outside sources to meet the added costs of the annex.

Library Trustee Jean Grace said that "with $1 million sitting in the bank, it's a little hard to go out with a silver cup and beg."

And Trustee Walter Gorey told the council that future city funding of the library is up to the city council. "I assure you, we can live within any allocation you give us," Gorey said.

"If you find a way to support the building, we can find a way to support ourselves without taxing the city."

Although the city owns the land on which the library annex would be built, the decision to build the annex is up to the library board.

Library Chairman Frances Herrick suggested the city raise the hostelry tax by 1 percent to support the library, an idea that drew support from Paul Laub, a Carmel merchant.

"The library and Sunset Center address the heart's blood of the community," Laub said. "I frankly think the tourists should pay for them." He said he would also support an increase in the city sales tax to generate more money for the city.

In a report to the council, City Administrator Douglas Schmitz said the city could be asked to pay another $40,000 next year to fund the operations of the library annex.

Maradei noted that if the percentage increase remains constant in future years, the city share of the library budget would reach $500,000 by 1987-88.

But Gorey said Maradei used figures based on inflationary times and noted that most of the rising library costs in recent years have been due to city-imposed employee salary increases.

Puppet magic

ABOUT TWO DOZEN Carmel youngsters watched a puppet show production of "Jack and the Beanstalk" to kick off a summer reading program at Harrison Memorial Library June 13. Children's librarian Linda Geroy said a free puppet workshop for children in grades three through seven will be held from 1:30 to 4 p.m. June 30. Children will learn how to make hand puppets using scraps and recycled materials and will be invited to participate in a six-week puppetry class at the library.

Council prohibits July 4th fireworks

A MORATORIUM on second story residential building and a proposed ordinance to make it a misdemeanor to climb on the banks at Carmel Beach will be discussed by the city council when it meets at 7:30 p.m. June 21 at city hall.

In a special June 14 afternoon session, the council banned fireworks from Carmel Beach on the Fourth of July holiday. Supporting the ban were council members Robert Stephenson, Helen Arnold and David Maradei. Mayor Charlotte Townsend abstained and Councilman Frank Lloyd was absent.

The mayor's abstention was important because the emergency ordinance to ban fireworks needed four votes to be approved. The abstention counted as a yes vote.

The council also unanimously voted to ban fires after 7 p.m. from the beach on July 2-4 to discourage large late-night crowds.

An emergency ordinance to close the beach after 9 p.m. on July Fourth failed to get the necessary four votes because Mrs. Arnold dissented.

Violations of the ordinances carry a maximum penalty of six months in jail and $500 fine.

Mrs. Arnold also wants the council to enact on June 21 an emergency ordinance that would make it a misdemeanor to climb on the beach banks, which were severely eroded by the winter storms.

That night the council will also be asked by brothers Tim and Terry Mallery to rescind the moratorium enacted June 7 on construction of new second-story residences. The moratorium also prohibits second-story additions to existing single-story houses and bans expansion of two-story residences.

Tim Mallery is an independent contractor who has worked in the Carmel area for 15 years.

The council created an "artifical rush" on applications for second story additions by the announcement it would review a proposed ban, Mallery claims.

CARMEL VALLEY RANCH developers have asked the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District to reconsider their application to annex about 30 acres of ranch land into the California-American Water Co. service area after the district board June 13 rescinded its Feb. 14 approval for the annexation, in the face of a lawsuit filed by the Carmel Valley Property Owners Association and the Carmel Area Coalition which challenged the annexation. The Cal-Am water would be used for an already-approved 100-unit resort lodge on ranch property (above).

Water management district rescinds action to annex CV Ranch area to Cal-Am Water Co.

By JOE LIVERNOIS

THE MONTEREY PENINSULA Water Management District shuffled out of a lawsuit Monday.

In a closed session, directors agreed to rescind a Feb.14 approval of the annexation of 30 acres at Carmel Valley Ranch to the California-American Water Co. service area.

The annexation would provide Cal-Am water to a proposed 100-unit resort lodge on Carmel Valley Ranch land.

With its decision to rescind certification of the annexation, the district board admitted it made a "process error" on Feb. 14 because it did not meet California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) standards, according to Bruce Buel, water management district manager.

The board of directors will reconsider a new Carmel Valley Ranch application for annexation to Cal-Am when it meets July 11, Buel said. At that time, the board could decide to ask for a supplemental environmental review of the annexation request or could turn down the request, he said.

The district was sued by the Carmel Valley Property Owners Association April 8 after the board certified the annexation in February. Buel said the board action Monday "will make the litigation moot."

Richard Dalsemer, president of the CVPOA, said in a written statement Monday night the association is "gratified" the district rescinded its annexation.

"The rescission provides clear evidence that it was necessary for the CVPOA to file the suit," Dalsemer said. "The water management district would not have taken the action it did Monday night had the illegality of its earlier actions not been unmistakable."

The CVPOA was joined in the suit by the city of Carmel and the Carmel Area Coalition.

The suit also names the Monterey County Board of Supervisors for allegedly reneging on its Carmel Valley Ranch Specific Plan approval that calls for ranch developers to seek alternative water sources before the project ties into Cal-Am.

DALSEMER SAID the CVPOA will continue to press its suit against the board of supervisors.

In fact, Dalsemer said, "the greatest responsibility lies with the board of supervisors, who we fear may not be as reasonable as the water management district, despite the strength of our suit."

Buel said the water management board agreed to rescind the annexation after David Laredo, attorney for the district, informed the board he believed its original decision would be "overturned," by the courts.

"Rather than fighting a losing battle, we vacated our permit," Buel said.

Under CEQA law, the district had the choice to either grant an "administerial exemption" or to ask for an environmental review when the application for the annexation was filed, Buel said.

Buel said his recommendation to the board to grant an administerial exemption was based on opinions he received from Assistant State Resources Secretary Norm Hill.

Upon review, however, Laredo found the district is required to make an environmental review of the type of annexation requested by Carmel Valley Ranch.

"It is clear that a good deal of additional environmental information should be developed before any further consideration is given to a new applicaton for additional water," Dalsemer said.

"The environmental information presently available is up to eight years out of date, with regard to hydrology and water service, and is based on the unproven assumption that water for the Carmel Valley Ranch will be provided from an aquifer independent of the Carmel River aquifer."

Also on Monday, the water board elected Dick Heuer, a Carmel Valley resident, to replace the late Al Gawthrop on the board through November.

Heuer narrowly nipped Nick Lombardo, a Carmel Valley resident and president of Rancho Canada Golf Club by a 12-11 margin in a "weighted ballot."

DIRECTORS LISTED three of eight candidates on their ballot in order of preference and the top candidate on each ballot received three points, the second received two points and the third received one point.

Lombardo was listed atop ballots submitted by directors Florus Williams, William Woodworth and William Peters. Heuer was the second pick on Peters' and Williams' ballots but was completely missing from Woodworth's ballot.

Heuer was the top choice on ballots submitted by directors Nancy McClintock, Edwin Lee and Alexander Henson. Lombardo was completely missing from Henson's and McClintock's ballot.

"There was some heavy duty politicking that went on last week," said Pat Bernardi, another Carmel Valley resident who submitted a resume for the vacated seat but who pulled out of the running Monday night and urged directors to vote for Heuer.

The seat now filled by Heuer will be one of three open seats up for election in November. Heuer, Ms. Bernardi and Lombardo have all announced they will seek election to the board.

Both Heuer and Williams, who was selected by Monterey Peninsula mayors to replace Jerry Fry on the board, were sworn in Monday night.

County takes hands-off attitude on septic tanks

RESIDENTS IN THE Rio Vista Drive area with failing septic systems will get no help from their neighbors.

Carmel Sanitary District Manager Michael Zambory was told by the Monterey County Environmental Health Department that it can not declare septic systems an "immediate safety hazard" on property adjoining property on which two septic systems have already failed.

"We can't just lie about it," said Tom Updike, supervising sanitarian for the environmental health department.

Updike was asked by the Carmel Sanitary District Board of Directors April 21 to inspect septic systems on Rio Vista Drive, in an unincorporated area east of Carmel city limits on Carmel Valley Road. His report is expected to be discussed by sanitary district directors at 1:30 p.m. June 16.

The sanitary district has been asked by Mary Brinton, a property owner on Rio Vista with a failing drainage field system, to annex her property to the sanitary district service area.

Mrs. Brinton said she and another neighbor with a failing system would not be able to foot the bill to connect to the sanitary district system alone. The cost of connection would be up to $50,000.

She said other neighboring property owners have said they would connect into the district, which would lower the per unit cost of connection.

But district ordinances state that no new property can be annexed to the district unless the existing sewer system presents an "immediate safety hazard."

And Updike said that no immediate safety hazard exists on her neighbors' property.

"There are a lot of retired people up there with large houses," he said. He noted that the homes could be "potential" safety hazards, but only if an inordinately large family moves into the homes.

Also at the Carmel Sanitary District Board of Directors meeting, the district is expected to adopt its draft 1983-84 budget of $2.4 million.

It is also scheduled to set a hearing on its annual flat rate assessments for sewer service July 21. Zambory said the annual rates "will not go up a nickel" this year.

Valley fire districts will drop user fees

By JOE LIVERNOIS

SPECIAL USER FEE taxes imposed by two Carmel Valley fire districts the past two years will not be imposed again this fiscal year.

In the Carmel Valley Fire Protection District, the special tax raised about $300,000 for the fire district that serves the Carmel Valley Village. Chief Robert Heald told directors last week that no more funds from any special tax are needed.

Chief Dan Guice of the Mid-Carmel Valley Fire District told the Pine Cone/Outlook last week that a user fee approved by voters in the district in 1981 earned $142,000 in two years but the special tax will be discontinued this year.

Heald also announced that the Monterey County Board of Supervisors tentatively gave the district $98,000 in district augmentation funds for its 1983-84 budget.

"That's what we asked for and that's what we got," Heald told the Pine Cone/Outlook.

It was a far cry from the political maneuvering and pressure tactics of a few years ago, when fire districts — and other special services districts — in Monterey County lobbied hard in Salinas to get sparse county dollars.

The special tax, which cost the average homeowner in the district about $76, was imposed "to bolster our finances" after passage of Prop. 13 in 1978 curtailed the availability of property taxes to fund special districts and to generate revenues for capital expenditures.

The special tax and ongoing capital expenditures were primarily responsible for a budget "carry-over" from last year that represents about two-fifths of the fire protection district budget of $513,000, Heald said.

The rest of the budget revenues come from property tax and interest earnings on budget reserves.

Also last week, the Carmel Valley Fire Protection District board of directors granted its four full-time firefighters a $100 a month cost of living raise, plus a 2 percent "performance increase."

Heald said the raise will not clash with a board of supervisors warning that special districts which grant unrealistically high wage and benefit increases to employees may be penalized when final approval of the augmentation funds is granted.

The Carmel Valley Fire Protection District was one of several special districts in Monterey County that were tentatively given $2.5 million in augmentation funds.

Guice told the Pine Cone/Outlook the Mid-Valley fire district tentatively allocated $56,000 in augmentation funds — about $4,000 more than it received last year.

The augmentation money represents about 17 percent of the anticipated 1983-84 Mid-Valley fire district budget.

Guice said that unlike most other fire districts in the area, the Mid-Valley fire district has been able to receive more money in property taxes in recent years because new building, especially at Carmel Valley Ranch, continues within the district.

He said the district also has been able to collect extra funds from annexation fees it imposed two years ago.

Other area special districts in the Carmel area to receive funds were the Carmel Highlands Fire District, $46,000; County Service Area 43, $127,000 and the Monterey Peninsula Regional Park District, $24,200.

CARMEL KITTENS became a natural window display promotion for the original cast recording of the Broadway hit, Cats, in the display window of Carmel Music June 11. CVPOA agrees to ponder Coastal Commission suit

THE CARMEL VALLEY Property Owners Association last week agreed to consider an invitation from the city of Carmel to participate in its lawsuit against the Coastal Commission.

Association directors continued discussion on the invitation for another month. This will give them time to determine whether the lawsuit which asks the courts to overturn a Coastal Commission decision to allow development on the Odello property is consistent with the CVPOA position on the Odello development.

The Carmel City Council voted late June 7 to sue the Coastal Commission and Monterey County over development plans on the artichoke ranch south of Carmel, but details of the council allegations were not known when CVPOA directors met in Los Laureles Lodge June 8.

The CVPOA has endorsed development on the eastern portion of the Odello property, but not development as extensive as the 162-unit subdivision allowed by the Coastal Commission when it certified the Carmel Area Local Coastal Program April 14.

Richard Dalsemer, CVPOA president, said the association supported a recommendation the Carmel Area Local Coastal Plan Citizens Advisory Committee made to limit development on the Odello property to 62 residential units.

The certified Carmel area plan allows 162 units, as well as a farmers' market, a restaurant and a recreational center.

The additional development was permitted if the Odellos agreed to use their remaining farmland to absorb flood waters from the Carmel River to protect surrounding commercial and residential development. That agreement was made before the coastal plan was approved.

Dalsemer said the CVPOA believes the merchants in lower Carmel Valley should "bear the burden" of flood control "because they will be the ones to benefit."

He added the association "is certainly willing to back up the decision of the city of Carmel if we find its claims are close to our own."

In other litigation-related matters, the CVPOA board was told that its legal defense fund for its lawsuit against Monterey County and the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District has received contributions from 240 donors that total $7,290.

The CVPOA filed a lawsuit against the county and the water district after representatives for the two entities made decisions that allow construction of a 100-unit resort lodge at Carmel Valley Ranch.

KATHIE McCRARY (left) of Village Business Service in Carmel Valley talked to her new employee, Stacee Austen, a 15-year old junior at Carmel High School. Jobs matching program:

CV chamber offers help for youth summer jobs

By JOE LIVERNOIS

SUMMER JOBS invariably become a priority for high school-aged students now that they have been "released" from school. So the Chamber of Commerce for Greater Carmel/Carmel Valley expects a surge of applicants for its "Jobs Matching Program."

Dr. Steve Austin of the Chamber of Commerce said that the program, which is in its first year, has already placed almost two dozen students with employers who need summer help.

Austin himself helped the chamber cause considerably when he hired three students for part-time work at his dental offices.

The chamber has worked with the cooperation of Carmel and Carmel Valley high schools to find jobs best suited to future career plans for the students.

For instance, Frank Chenault, a Carmel Valley High School student who has a particular interest in parks and recreation, has been given a three-month job with the Big Sur Campground "doing all types of things," said Blake Fuessenich, a teacher who has been the Carmel Valley High School intermediary.

Ryan Borders also got a job with Joseph's Deli in the Carmel Valley Village through the program, he said.

"He really needed work," Fuessenich said. "But for him, this is more than just a job for money. It's the kind of work he may continue to do."

And Stacee Austen, a 15-year old junior at Carmel High School, found that her new part-time job for Kathie McCrary's Village Business Service also gave her work as the McCrary family babysitter.

The shame of it, Ms. McCrary said, is that "we've got kids waiting for employers."

That is not to fault Austin. "Steve has worked like crazy on this," said Fuessenich.

Ms. McCrary said many employers in the village and Mid-Carmel Valley, including herself, have decided to wait until Carmel Valley Road is repaired before they hire students for summer employment.

Stacee now does maintenance work at the business service office, but Ms. McCrary said she will probably hire another student to do the maintenance work and let Stacee do some of the office work later in the summer.

THE SUMMER JOBS program was praised by both Fuessenich and Josephine Tracy, career center specialist at Carmel High School.

"It's been a wonderful program," she said. She said she has placed 15 students in summer jobs as a result of the program already this year.

"It's very, very good for our kids," said Fuessenich. "A job can really turn a kid around."

Austin said the "Jobs Matching Program" is still in its "formative stages" and he expects continued success in the future.

Ms. McCrary's office is also the chamber office and she said that both students who need employment and employers who need students can contact her office at 659-4000 to pick up applications.

Austin and Fuessenich said they believe the chamber program is a good way to benefit the community because youth unemployment in the Valley is high.

"Despite all the affluence, there are an awful lot of people in this valley who need money," said Fuessenich.

It is also valuable because it can help high school-aged students determine the type of career they might wish to pursue, Austin said.

Garden flowers next to Piccadillly Park

By MICHAEL GARDNER

WALK PAST Piccadilly Park on Dolores Street these days and you will see an ugly vacant lot adjacent to a small, flowered garden and picnic spot.

The garden is the result of a couple of months of work by Jim Dougherty, owner of Spencers on Ocean Avenue.

The adjacent vacant lot is the result of city inaction on its own 40-by-100 foot property for the past three years.

Will the Carmel City Council once again discuss the fate of Piccadilly Park, west side of Dolores Street between Ocean and Seventh avenues, when it meets at 7:30 p.m., Tuesday, June 21 at city hall, on Monte Verde Street between Ocean and Seventh avenues.

'You sort of have to put your money where your mouth is. You say you don't want honkey-tonk, Coney Island here, then you have to decide how you're going to keep Carmel from becoming that way,' she added. 'Most of us in business want to keep Carmel as much as the residents do.'

At issue once again is whether the city should place the disposition of the park before Carmel voters.

The council previously had a choice either voluntarily to order a measure on the November ballot or face a $5,000 special election.

In previous meetings, a majority of the council wanted anti-Piccadilly Park petition leader and former Mayor Barney Laiolo to follow through with the initiative process.

Laiolo claims that he has obtained signatures of more than 900 registered voters who live within the city limits on initiative petitions which demand a ballot measure on the disposition of the still-undeveloped park. The property was purchased by the city for $400,000.

The council was in a corner. On one hand, a park-supporting majority believes that the initiative process should be carried out by Laiolo and he should be the one to force an election.

On the other, the council would have cost the city an estimated $3,000 extra by not voluntarily placing the issue on the regular November ballot,

Now the situation has changed.

Because of delays in deciding the issue, the initiative schedule has been extended just long enough so that by the time the signatures are verified and an election ordered, the measure will go on the November ballot, according to city clerk Jeanne Brehmer.

If Laiolo submits his initiative petitions to the city on June 21, it will take up to 30 days for the Monterey County Elections Department to verify the signatures.

Laiolo needs 575 verified signatures to force a special election or 383 signatures to force the question to be placed on the next regular municipal ballot in April.

If the signatures are verified, the council could pass a resolution in early August to place a measure on the November ballot.

UNDER THE initiative process, the council would have to set the election date 88 to 103 days after adoption of the election resolution, tentatively scheduled for Aug. 2. The November election is 98 days after Aug. 2, Mrs. Brehmer said.

The park has been a source of controversy ever since the city council purchased the property in 1980. Opponents of the park decry its purchase price of $400,000 and landscaping costs of some $75,000. They claim that the 40-by-100 foot lot is too small for the cost and that the money could be used for other city projects, such as beach repair, parking and senior citizen housing.

Supporters of the park say it is an oasis in the downtown commercial zone. They point out that the park — if it were rescinded — would merely be replaced by a commercial development, which would lead to more tourists and more parking problems.

A pro-Piccadilly park petition signed by more than 100 area business people was presented to the council last month.

Several merchants who signed the petition voiced similar concerns to the Pine Cone/-Outlook that the city needs more open space and less development.

"I think the only way we're going to be able to keep Carmel with the charm that it has is to keep some open space and you pay a price for open space," said Rosemary Blackstone, co-owner of Rosemary and George on Lincoln Street.

"You sort of have to put your money where your mouth is. You say you don't want honkey-tonk, Coney Island here, then you have to decide how you're going to keep Carmel from becoming that way," she added. "Most of us in business want to keep Carmel as much as the residents do."

The high cost of the property and subsequent development, should the city cancel the park project, will mean high rents which resident-oriented businesses will not be able to afford, Mrs. Blackstone said.

Wes Stoddard, owner of The Shoe Box three doors down from the parksite, said development will also alter rents in the area.

Cost of the development will mean higher rents for the building and eventually lead to higher rents on Dolores Street, Stoddard believes.

Stoddard, who called the vacant lot an "eyesore filled with garbage and weeds" added:"Personally, I want the city to get off the stick and make it a park."

MARY LOU Linhart, owner of Mary Loom Weaving and original owner of Piccadilly before the city bought the lot, wants the park built.

"I'd like to see a park there. After all, if they took the property from me, I'd like to see them do what they bought the property for," said Mrs. Linhart, who owns several buildings in the immediate vicinity of the proposed park.

"We definitely want a park there. A park would just be super," said Barbara Compton, manager of Cachet of Carmel near the park site.

Stephanie Wunner, of Carmel Bay Company on Ocean Avenue, said the park would serve both tourists and residents.

"I think Carmel needs another open green space. People come here and there's no place to stop and just rest and enjoy how great this town is," she said. "The tourists and residents need a place to stop and rest."

Optometrist Noel Perry of Lincoln Spectacle Makers on Lincoln Street added: "I think it would just be a pleasant thing to have at this end of town. I think it's a good location for the park."

Jim Dougherty, who created his own little park adjacent to the Piccadilly site, favors a park, but said Carmel residents need to decide the future of the project.

"I think, personally, it would be wonderful to have it. It's the people who should make the decision. If they don't like it, fine. If they do, then let's get on with (the building) and get it over with," said Dougherty, who owns Spencer's Shop on Ocean Avenue. His back door is about 20 feet from the northern Piccadilly boundary.

But not all area business people embrace the park.

"I think it is the biggest travesty. It's ludicrous to spend taxpayers' money when there's plenty of other things with much greater need," said Edward Johnson, owner of Toots Lagoon, a restaurant that is directly south of the park site.

Johnson called the purchase a "giant error" saying the money would be better spent on housing, transportation and parking needs.

THE CONTRAST between the city's undeveloped Piccadilly Park (foreground) and a small garden and picnic area privately built by Jim Dougherty, owner of Spencers, is evident in this photograph. The city council is to discuss the fate of the Dolores Street Piccadilly Park when it meets at 7:30 p.m. June 21 at city hall. (Michael Gardner photo.)

GERTRUDE MCEWEN, whose mother was the first woman superintendent of schools in South Dakota, is a pioneer in the field of special education. She operates the Sabin-McEwen Learning Institute in Carmel. (Michael Gardner photos.)

Gertrude McEwen has a place for children with special needs

By ROBERT MISKIMON

AS A CHILD, Gertrude McEwen had a strong role model in the area of educational pioneering.

Her mother, Ruth Sabin, was the first female school superintendent in South Dakota. And when she had a blind daughter with a learning disability, Mrs. McEwen's eyes were fully opened to the need for special education.

So in her mid-30s, Mrs. McEwen decided to return to school to get a teaching credential. The result of that decision and that motivation today is the Sabin-McEwen Learning Institute in Carmel, which specializes in services to children with learning disabilities.

The private, non-profit foundation has operated at Sunset Center in Carmel for the last two years, since Mrs. McEwen had to move the school from her home on Val Verde Way because of complaints by neighbors about increased traffic.

'These are the future Winston Churchills,' she remarked. 'These are the kids who fall through the cracks of the school systems. And every one of them has an actively involved parent. It's a delightful experience to see children grow and realize they're not mentally retarded.'

The center now provides specialized services to about 50 students with learning disabilities, but Mrs. McEwen, director of the center, estimates there may be many more who need those kinds of services.

"At one time, the state said 2 percent of all students had some kind of learning disability," Mrs. McEwen told the Pine Cone/-Outlook. "But I read something recently that said the real figure may be somewhere between 8 and 9 percent. There must be 1,000 students in this area who need our services."

Actual age range of the students is from three to 30 years, since those who have a learning disability must struggle their entire lives to overcome the handicap, Mrs. McEwen said.

She ought to know. Although she realizes there is still somewhat of a stigma attached to those with learning disabilities, Mrs. McEwen admits she herself has dyslexia — the most common type of learning disability.

"I was born with the umbilical cord around my neck and without enough oxygen," Mrs. McEwen said. "I went through a ghastly time trying to learn, and got no help because people didn't know about learning disabilities then.

"Even though both of my parents were teachers, it was a real struggle," she said. " I went through college, though. But there are still days when I can't spell worth beans. It took a lot of drive and determination. I don't think I figured out that I had a learning disability until graduate school."

That's one of the reasons why Mrs. McEwen feels she can empathize with the needs of her special students. She speaks lovingly of them as she describes their progress, as would a doting parent.

ALTHOUGH she has four daughters, only one has a learning disability, Mrs. McEwen said. But that daughter — Jan — provided her with the interest and motivation to return to school after a career in business.

So Mrs. McEwen received her teaching credential and began to teach in the Oakland public schools in 1966; she then returned to school to earn her master's degree and worked as a reading consultant in the Oakland schools.

After she moved to Carmel with her husband, Mrs. McEwen started the Sabin-McEwen Learning Institute in her home with the assistance of Dr. Eileen Cronin, head of the learning disability center at Holy Names College. She also worked with local psychologists Tom Bishop and Doug Courtney to administer tests to screen potential students, and took on Mary Ann Schroeter as her assistant.

the Crosby Pro-Am Golf Tournament.

The "Sabin" in the name of the school derives from Mrs. McEwen's mother, Ruth Sabin.

In 1976, the school acquired its non-profit status and more enrollment. By 1981, the number of students had grown to the point that Mrs. McEwen's neighbors complained about increased traffic caused by vehicles driven to and from the school.

After an emotional appeal on behalf of the school, the Carmel Board of Ajuustments agreed Aug. 31, 1981 to permit the institute to occupy the Girl Scout House adjacent to Sunset Center. Later, the school moved into Room 17 at Sunset Center. Administrative offices are located in the Carmel Rancho Shopping Center.

Eight of the approximately 50 students attend the learning center for a half day, under the guidance of director Anne Hersey. The others receive several hours of special instruction per week under a "pullout" program in their own schools, including Santa Catalina, All Saints', and Briarcliff Academy and the local public schools, Mrs. McEwen said.

About half the students have some type of central nervous system dysfunction, although most are of average or above average intelligence, she added. Many persons with learning abilities not only overcome the handicap, but excel, Mrs. McEwen said.

"These are the future Winston Churchills," she remarked. "These are the kids who fall through the cracks of the school systems. And every one of them has an actively involved parent. It's a delightful experience to see children grow and realize they're not mentally retarded.

'MANY OF THESE children come in here with very low self-esteem. They will have to work with these learning disabilities their entire lives. These young people work harder because they know they've got a problem and they're determined to solve it. They learn to compensate for the disability."

It's vitally important to recognize and assist those with learning disabilities early in life, because often the lowered self-esteem that accompanies such a handicap can lead to behavioral problems in the teenage, high school years, Mrs. McEwen said.

Each student in the school benefits from a specially-tailored program designed to fit his or her individual needs, she said. "It's like putting a jigsaw puzzle together to help that individual child," Mrs. McEwen said. "Some children probably need help right through college.

"Every child can learn if we can find a way to teach him," Mrs. McEwen said.

'We don't label our students,' she said. 'We just say they have a discrepancy in skills. There are some who just can't make their handwriting look good. Most are extremely cooperative and I have absolutely no behavior problems.'

One example of just how well a person with a learning disability can do was provided by Mrs. McEwen's own daughter, who despite her double affliction of blindness and a learning disability, graduated with honors from the University of California.

"We don't label our students," she said. "We just say they have a discrepancy in skills. There are some who just can't make their handwriting look good. Most are extremely cooperative and I have absolutely no behavior problems."

Mrs. McEwen said she has visions of expanding the school to include more students and to provide a full-day program for those students who want it. Under such a program, afternoon hours would include physical education, social sciences, and science to augment the reading, writing, math and spelling classes during the morning.

If the move to a larger facility can be coordinated with expansion of the program, Mrs. McEwen believes the needs of students with learning disabilities in the Carmel-Carmel Valley area can be better met.

DIRECTOR ANNE Hersey listened to a student's book report at the Sabin-McEwen Learning Institute.

JESSE ALINDER shared a book of Ansel Adams photographs with teacher Terrie Burkhardt at the Sabin-McEwen Learning Institute in Carmel.

MICHAEL ERKILETIAN read his report on Martin Luther King to teacher Sharon Frymire during class at the Sabin-McEwen Learning Institute.

School volunteers donate time to student activities

By MICHAEL GARDNER

SCHOOL VOLUNTEER work is as much a parental duty as changing diapers, kissing a skinned knee to make it well and fretting over that first big date.

Just about every parent pays his dues with magazine subscription drives, bake sales and PTA sessions that join the scribbles on the calendar next to dentist, hairdresser and luncheon appointment.

Before their child is ready for kindergarten and right after graduation day, most parents are content to let the other guy organize the rummage sale or chaperone the dance. However, there are exceptions.

Ena Grundy is a retired educator. Reg Greenburg is a retired research chemist. Joyce Esaki is the mother of a 14-month-old son. Others are retired folks with little to do and lots of time on their hands.

CATHERINE SALES signed to a student while volunteering at Tularcitos School.

These are just a few examples of the many volunteers who have no children in district schools but who spend untold hours helping others' children learn.

Their only reward is a smile on the child's face and all say that's enough of a paycheck for them. In separate interviews with the Pine Cone/Outlook, the volunteers explained why they work in the schools and some even offered some advice on improving education.

Perhaps the most feisty and outspoken of the group is a retired British educator named Ena Grundy, a woman in her 80s surrounded by five-year-old kindergartners at River School.

"This is life to me. I would be dead and in cold storage if it were not for the children. Children keep me alive," Mrs. Grundy said.

Mrs. Grundy, like many of the volunteers, performs a variety of tasks. One day she will chaperone a field trip. Another day spent in the classroom could range from reading a story to helping a child with weaving.

Mrs. Grundy freely gives advice on what she believes is the number one problem at the school — overcrowded class sizes.

"No one can care the way you should care for 34 children in one class," she said. "Children are not masses of bees in a beehive."

A pacifist, Mrs. Grundy believes that government should "build minds, not bombs."

"I feel that the most important thing in the world is not to build nuclear bombs. We need more caring, sensitive people in the classrooms," she said. "Children are our future. To cut down on education is a crime against life."

JOYCE ESAKI, a former student-teacher at Carmel River School, volunteers alongside Mrs. Grundy in Kay Goines' kindergarten class.

A credentialed teacher, Mrs. Eskai volunteers her time for two reasons: a 14-month-old son ("who takes up most of my time") and Mrs. Goines ("It gives me the opportunity to see a great teacher and a beautiful person at work").

The experience gained in the classroom will help her become a better teacher once her son is older, Mrs. Esaki believes.

'I feel that the most important thing in the world is not to build nuclear bombs. We need more caring, sensitive people in the classrooms,' she said. 'Children are our future. To cut down on education is a crime against life.'

"I just love the children. They're our hope. They're so endearing and giving," she said. "It also helps me give more to my own son. It gives me energy.

"It's something Kay Goines said: 'The more you give, the more you love.' I came here to give and I get back so much more."

Carmel River School Principal Vance Frasier calls volunteers "an educational bridge to the community."

"We're grateful and we really appreciate what these people contribute," he said.

At Tularcitos Elementary School in Carmel Valley, volunteers come from a variety of backgrounds.

Fluent in Spanish, volunteer Valley Crawford is an invaluable resource for the kindergarten classes. She also helps in other grades and serves as an interpreter during parent-teacher conferences.

"I'm retired now. I just love children and I love working with the children. I don't care who they are. I just love children," Mrs. Crawford said.

"That's why I'm doing it — for my own satisfaction because I enjoy working with children."

VOLUNTEER Reg GREENBURG (left) chatted with teacher Jim Helgason during a Carmel High School class in special education. Greenburg is one of many volunteers in the Carmel Unified School District that helps teachers in the classroom. Many teachers have come to rely on the volunteers for their professional expertise. In addition, volunteers allow teachers more time with individual students.

Mrs. Crawford was born and raised in Panama. "I spoke Spanish before I spoke English," she explained. Educated in Europe, she also speaks fluent German.

Annabelle Arnal is a retired nurse whose work in Imogene Speiser's third grade class "brings back a lot of memories." She also volunteered for five years in Evelyn Damgaard's first grade class.

Between her job and raising a family, Mrs. Arnal was unable to volunteer earlier. Now she is catching up.

"I just like to go to school and do volunteer work. I really enjoy it. I've always wanted to be a third grade teacher," she laughed.

"I'm interested in children and they do need a lot of help on a one-to-one basis," she continued. "A lot of mothers have to work outside now. I have the time and I just wanted to give it to volunteer."

TWO TULARCITOS School volunteers drive all the way from Monterey to work with hearing-impaired students.

Inez Wellford began to learn sign language three years ago and now spends several days a week with hearing-impaired children.

"I just read with the children and help them learn new words and signs," she explained. "I really enjoy it. It gives me something to do. It's something I enjoy and I learn so much too."

Catherine Sales worked with the hearing impaired in London, but her travel visa does not permit her to work in the United States.

"I work mainly with the kindergarten kids because they have problems following instructions. That's a big part of the program — getting the kids integrated in the classroom," she said.

Without volunteers, many of the special programs could not be offered, Tularcitos School Principal Mary Jane Stanford observed.

"I think we've come up with some very exciting programs at the school. We just couldn't have these things happen without volunteers," she said.

At Carmel High School, retired research chemist Reg Greenburg voluntarily has helped students in special education classes for the past five years.

Greenburg tutors students in English, math and civics.

"I get a lot of satisfaction out of helping, especially when I see improvement," he expained. "I feel I'm doing something worthwhile. What's the point of loafing all of the time?"

'The kids should be caught early when they're having trouble, way back as early as the second grade. Many of them have good intelligence. They just need somebody that they know is truly interested in them. They need encouragement, not just sitting in class and getting promoted carelessly,' he said.

Many of the students he assists would not need special education classes if they received the necessary attention in the earlier grades, Greenburg believes.

"The kids should be caught early when they're having trouble, way back as early as the second grade. Many of them have good intelligence. They just need somebody that they know is truly interested in them. They need encouragement, not just sitting in class and getting promoted carelessly," he said.

Greenburg's assistance frees teacher Jim Helgason to offer more personal attention to the students.

"It's just great to have him here. He works very well with the students. It really makes my job a lot easier. I've come to depend on him," Helgason said.

New police officers bring new attitudes

By FLORENCE MASON

CARMEL'S newest police officers share an important concept about their roles and about the role of women in law enforcement.

One of them is the first woman hired by the Carmel Police Department as a sworn officer, assigned to regular patrol duty.

Officer Jan Yost came to police work by way of her interest in natural resources management and experience as a state park ranger. After she grew up in La Mirada ("just tell people it is about five miles from Knott's Berry Farm and they'll know where it is"), she graduated from Cal Poly in San Luis Obispo. She worked at Morro Bay State Park as a seasonal worker for two years while in college, and hoped for a permanent job in the state parks system.

Attendance at the Butte Police Academy in Chico was part of her plan to become fully qualified for that job as a park ranger. One of five women students among 24, she graduated at the top of her class.

'You have to be someone's friend — a nice person — before you can gain their cooperation and support, get people to work with you.'

While there, she had to work hard at the physical requirements for graduation.

"Their size and muscle development make it easier for men," she believes. "We women had to spend extra time on it." She had only fired a gun a few times before she enrolled in the academy, but there she had plenty of time to become familiar with guns.

But permanent park ranger jobs were scarce. "There aren't many of them in the first place," Officer Yost said. "And lots of people see them as dream jobs. For one thing, park rangers are known as 'good guys.' "

So Jan Yost, at 22, applied to several police departments. When the police academy told her about the opening in Carmel, her response was immediate.

"It's so beautiful here; it met my need to work in natural surroundings. And it's out of the smog!" Her attraction to police work in general? "It's a wide open field for women now. And I really like to work with people. You meet a lot of the public this way."

The concept of the police officer's role that she shares with Steven McKim, her fellow rookie on the Carmel Police Department, is one of concern about image. "Too many cops have a bad image," Officer Yost said. "You have to be someone's friend — a nice person — before you can gain their cooperation and support, get people to work with you."

The image of a police officer is "just a little more negative" than that of the park ranger, she believes. And the role of the park ranger is gradually changing as law enforcement becomes a more significant part of rangers' responsibility.

That doesn't necessarily mean that she sees her present role as temporary. "It depends on how I like this. I have limited experience in both fields so far."

So far, she is delighted with the reception she has received in the Carmel Police Department and in the city. After only two days on the job, she can say: "People in the department have been very accepting of the fact that I am a woman. I'm not surprised, but I really didn't know what to expect. I feel really comfortable in town, too."

Officer Yost had been a runner even before going to the police academy, and running remains one of her favorite activities. So do horseback riding and racquetball. Looking even taller than 5-foot-8, she is tanned to almost the same color as her light brown hair. She lives in Pacific Grove, where she shares a house with two roommates and her dog.

Officer Yost was relieved when she heard the department was hiring two officers, not just herself. Officer Steven McKim, older at 35 and already experienced in law enforcement as well as military service, had worked with women deputies when he was with the sheriff's department in Tulsa, Okla.

"I believe there is a place for women in law enforcement," he said. "The female officers I worked with in Oklahoma did a good job. Their attitude is important; they'll make it if they see themselves first as law enforcement officers."

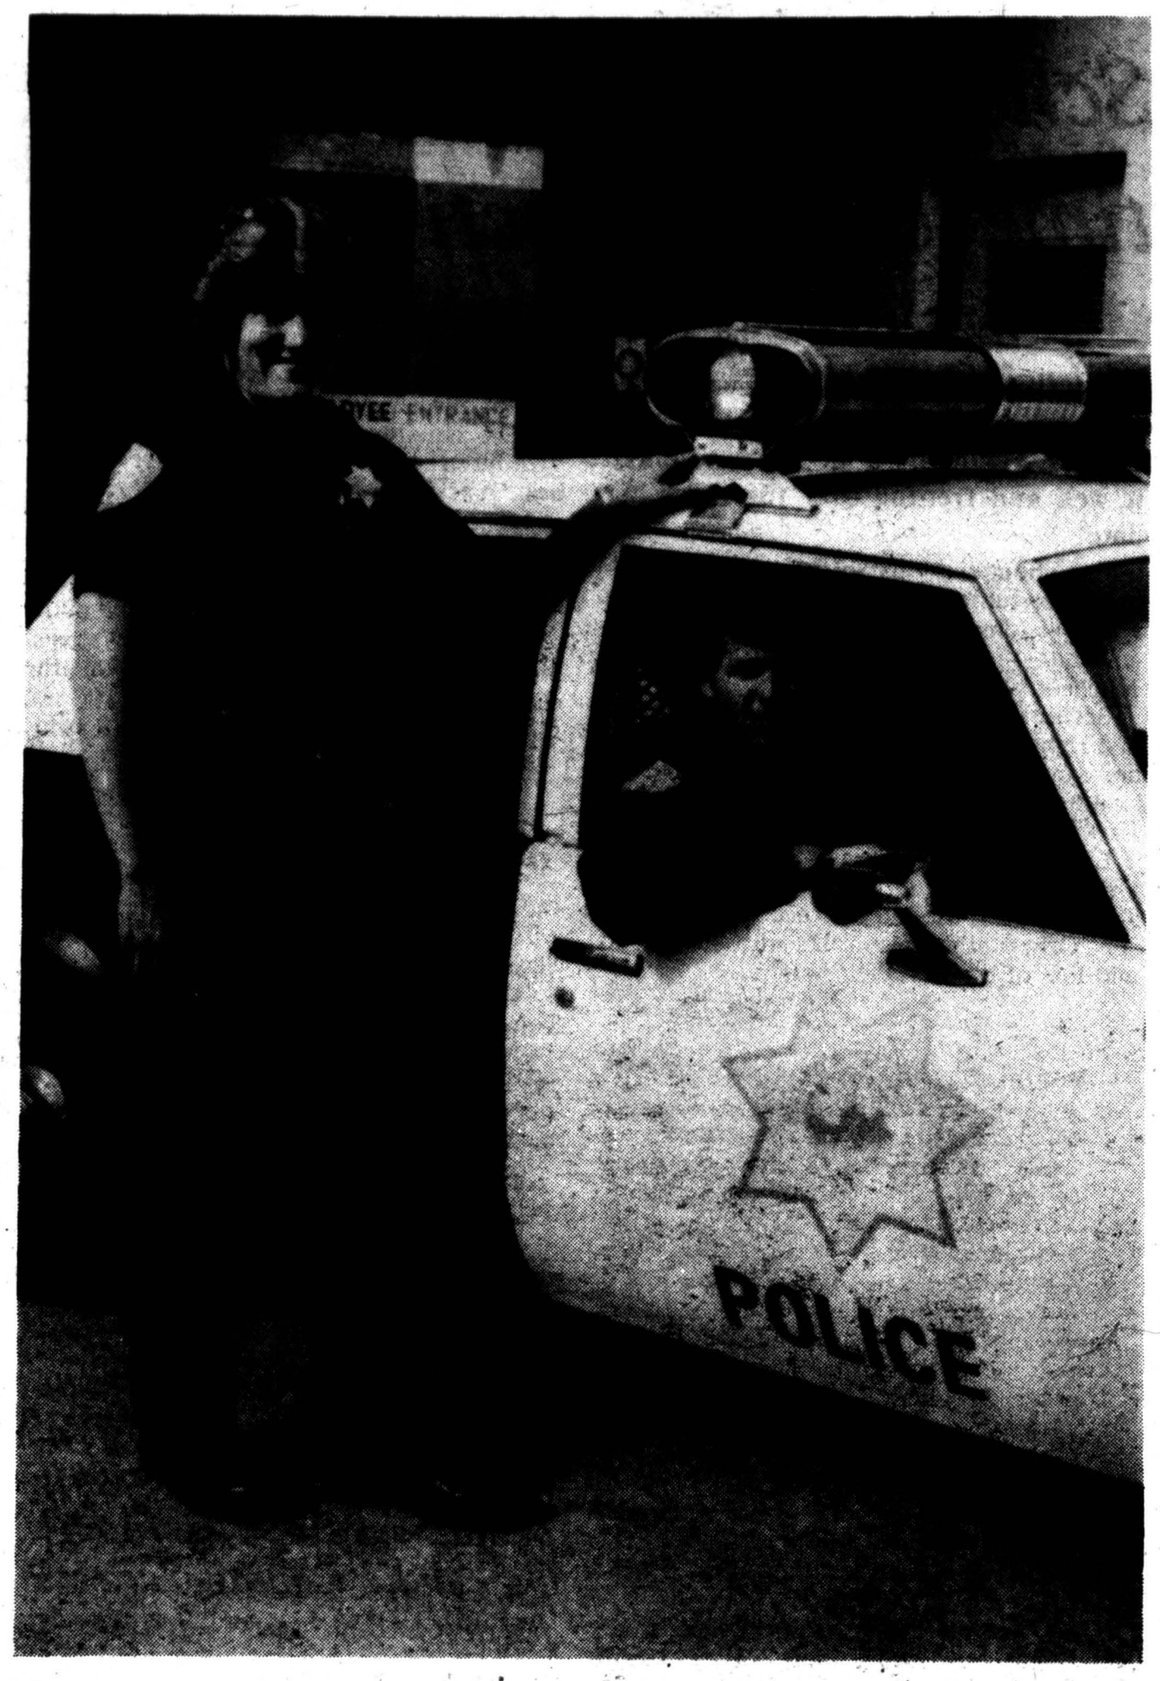
WHAT HE SHARES with Officer Yost is the important concept of the image carried by many police officers. "Enforcing law is just a small part of it," he said. "If I can do something to change the image of police officers, that will be very satisfying. I want to help people; we're here to help people."

Officer McKim lived in Tulsa until he went into the service and to Vietnam in 1968 as a test pilot for helicopters. When he left the service in 1972, he decided to pursue a career in law enforcement, partly because he had a neighbor who liked being a deputy sheriff and also because he saw that aerial patrols were coming about.

He helped to establish an aerial patrol a year later, but the program had to be cut when funding was inadequate. He went back into the service then and landed at Fritzche Airfield, Fort Ord, as chief test pilot with Army helicopters.

Finding that Army life did not entirely suit him, Steve McKim left the service in October, 1981 and opened his own business for the design and manufacture of ultralight aircraft (motorized hang gliders). His partner's situation changed and the business closed.



JAN YOST and Steve McKim are the new additions to the Carmel Police Department patrol force. (Michael Gardner photo.)

He enjoyed law enforcement and felt that in these economic times he needed to get into something technical and something not directly dependent upon the economy, so he enrolled in the Central Coast Counties Police Academy at Gavilan College. The opportunity to work in Carmel had special appeal for him "because of this department's reputation in the law enforcement community."

Officer McKim understood before he came that the Carmel Police Department's standards "are far above the norm," and nothing he saw in the process of being hired, or on his first few days of duty, has changed that impression.

"I'm very impressed with the leadership here," he said. "The administration of the department is respected by everyone I've come in contact with in the department."

He has also appreciated the other officers' "friendly and courteous attitudes," especially that of Officer Ken O'Donovan, with whom he shared his first day on duty.

"If I had to put a label on the department, this is what I would say: very professional," McKim said.

The only negative he could come up with, after some thought, was "the fog!"

Officer McKim and his wife, Marti, are staying with friends in Pebble Beach until they find a place of their own. Yes, they would like that to be in Carmel, if possible. Marti McKim has just started in a local office position with Mutual of Omaha.

Steve McKim still enjoys flying for fun. He said that a friend has an aerobatic biplane — "It's a wonderful way to work off frustrations." In the winter, he likes to ski and at any time of the year it's golf and racquetball. Trim, with dark brown hair and hazel eyes, he seems fit, and friendly.

The two new officers will alternate on the day shift and swing shift during their six weeks of field training. After that, they will receive permanent assignments.

When Police Chief Jack McGilvray took office in March, 1982, he said: "Anyone hired for this department will always be the best possible candidate. That could be a woman." Today, he said: "Of all the candidates we interviewed, these two were the best."

Cable television pact faces council June 21

By MICHAEL GARDNER

MICKEY MOUSE is coming to your living room, but the arrival of the famous animated cartoon character via the new Walt Disney channel is just one of the changes underway at Monterey Peninsula Television.

Those changes are in the works at MPTV just as the Carmel City Council prepares to review a proposed 15-year contract renewal for the cable franchise in Carmel.

The proposed agreement is to be presented to the council when it meets at 7:30 p.m. June 21 at city hall.

The agreement proposes that the company continue to pay 3 percent of its gross revenues to the city. For fiscal year 1983-84, that 3 percent fee is expected to add an estimated $12,000 to city coffers. The money is placed in the city general fund.

Under current federal law, cities award franchises to the cable companies based on low bid, service and past history. When the contract expires, a city reviews the performance of the station and rate structure to determine whether to extend the agreement or seek other companies.

Councilman Helen Arnold has expressed fears that cable rates will rise along with the glut of premium channels, tier-boxes and expansion of the stations to include the Cable News Network, Reuters News Service, the Christian Broadcasting Network and the USA station.

"It's an emerging industry where the competition is fierce because of the billions of dollars at stake," she explained. "My point is this — that because the competition is so great, more and more of the extras are being added.

"By the time they take all of these things out of the basic cable, there will be nothing left but the leavings," Mrs. Arnold said.

The senior citizen populace of Carmel relies on television as their only entertainment. For many single seniors, television is their only companion, she added.

"I don't have anything against the current cable company. I just think that before we give them anything carte blanche, I want to know how they're going to structure it and how much they're going to charge."

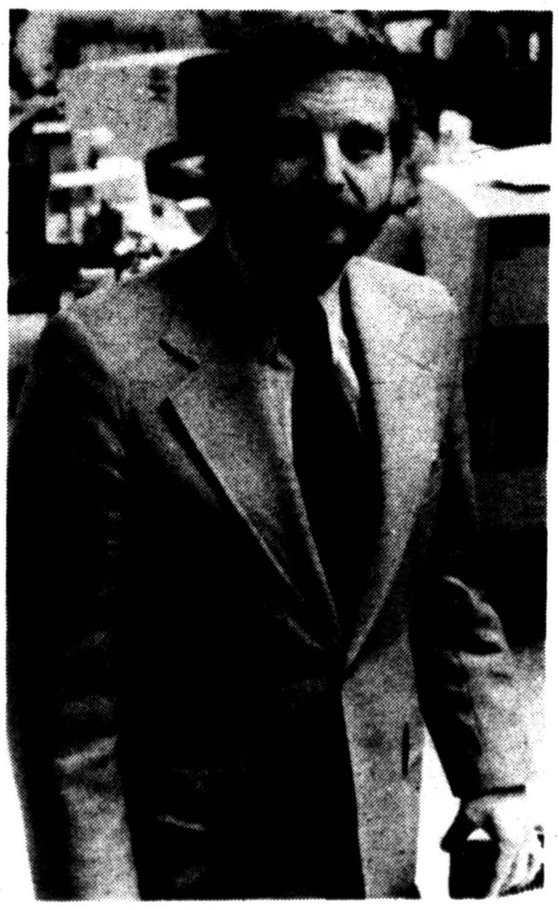
THE CABLE company does not plan to raise its rates in the near future and is actually increasing the number of channels available for the basic monthly fee of $8.50, MPTV President Sal Balesteri told the Pine Cone/-Outlook.

"Cost of the basic cable will probably go up like everything goes up," Balesteri explained. "But we probably won't apply for an increase until sometime in the middle of 1984."



SAL BALESTERI, president of MPTV, said the company will always offer between 12 and 16 channels on the basic cable, which now costs $8.50 for Carmelites. Councilwoman Helen Arnold is concerned that increases in "premium" and "tier" programming" may push cable costs beyond the reach of lower-income residents. (Michael Gardner photo.)

Under the existing franchise agreement with Carmel, the city must approve any rate increase. The provision is under negotiation in contract talks on the new franchise agreement, Balesteri explained.

The $8.50 price is also a bargain for the 12 basic cable stations, which will soon be expanded to 16, Balesteri said.

A list of other cable company charges indicates that MPTV has a lower basic monthly cable fee: Falcon Cable charges $9.25 to $9.75 in the Watsonville, Prunedale and Gilroy area; the Fort Ord contractor, Coastside, charges $8.55; King City Cable has a basic fee of $9.50, and Sonic charges its Watsonville-area residents between $8 and $8.75, Balesteri said.

Like any business, MPTV does not want to price itself out of the market, Balesteri said.

'It's an emerging industry where the competition is fierce because of the billions of dollars at stake.'

The alternative to cable is either no television or picking up the over-the-air stations with an antenna or satellite receiver.

Balesteri pointed out that most residents can already receive five to eight stations over the air.

"I'm not going to raise the cable costs so high that I lose customers," he said. "I won't cut off my nose to spite my face by raising rates."

Figures provided by MPTV show that 2,564 of the 2,989 households in Carmel subscribe to the basic cable system. Of those, 432 subscribe to either HBO or Showtime.

Balesteri said he understands the concerns expressed by Mrs. Arnold because of the additions of the "premium stations" of Showtime, Home Box Office and the Disney Channel (to be offered in July). The all-sports station ESPN is included in the cost of the premium subscription of $11.

The movie channels, sports station and soon-to-be available "tier" programming are just a reflection of changes in audience tastes.

"I think there will always be basic cable, but people are not interested anymore in the basic programming. They're just dissatisfied with network programming," Balesteri explained.

TO MEET the demands of alternative programming, MPTV plans to expand its cable channels from 12 to 16.

"We're trying to make the basic channels attractive to the overall customer at a basic cost. We're trying to make it more palatable," Balesteri said.

The first major addition will be the USA station, which features sports and movie programming.

Another station, Cable News Network, will be a 24-hour news channel.

The limited broadcast stations to be expanded to full 24-hours are: the Christian Broadcasting Newtork (movies, religious programming, family shows) on Channel 4, C-SPAN (Congressional hearings) on channel 7, and Reuters (headline news) on channel 5.

Reuters, CBN and C-SPAN programming are now carried part-time when the distant station is blacked out because it broadcasts the same programming as a local television station.

To make room for the additions, MPTV wants to move four stations to a tier box. The tier is similar to the Showtime box, but would be offered free.

The changes have been delayed because the Spanish-language station KCBA in Modesto (Channel 36) does not want to be moved to the tier. The station has filed discrimination charges in Monterey County Superior Court. The litigation has not been settled.

Paid tiers are also in the future at MPTV, Balesteri said.

An all-news tier is planned that would also carry weather and business news.

Another tier would offer a variety of music stations, focused on country and western, rock and roll, and classical, Balesteri explained.

However, the new tiers are not expected to be offered until at least next year, he said.

Cost of subscription to the news or music tiers would be about $4, Balesteri added.

FUTURE PROGRAMMING plans of Monterey Peninsula TV include the addition of the nationwide USA network, which features news, movies, original programming and sports events, such as tennis tournaments between number one Ivan Lendl (above) and greats such as Jimmy Conners and John McEnroe.

ONE OF the new premium services offered to cable subscribers will be the new Disney Channel. MPTV plans to offer the service this summer, for an additional cost equivalent to Showtime and Home Box Office (HBO). Above is a scene from the Disney classic Alice in Wonderland.

Big city type crime comes to Carmel with robbery and beating episode

CARMEL residents may be getting used to the idea that there is crime in their city.

But when they think of "crime" they think of shoplifting, purse snatching, the occasional home burglary and the exceedingly rare rape or murder.

Early last Monday morning, three masked men invaded a Carmel landmark — the Pine Inn. When they left, between $5,000 and $6,000 had been stolen and four men — one a passerby — had been beaten brutally.

It began while Tom O'Connor, a night clerk who is also responsible for fire security checks, was making his rounds. He had reached the Monte Verde side of the inn when he was attacked by the three men and beaten to the ground.

O'Connor was bound and left there; apparently the burglars thought he was unconscious. But he was not and after he heard someone run away from the building, he got his feet loose and, with his hands still tied, ran to the Monterey Baking Company across the street.

A worker there did not let the distraught, disheveled man in, but she did call the police. Meanwhile, O'Connor ran on to the Cypress Inn (which is under the same ownership as the Pine Inn) and a second call was made to the police from there.

While O'Connor's unpleasant odyssey was going on, the three masked men had attacked night auditor Paul Pomervill in his office and a third employee, Frank Gonzales. A fourth man, Gabriel Random, had the misfortune to choose that moment to come into the hotel to buy some cigarettes.

He, too, was beaten. He feigned unconsciousness but was hit again by one of the men as the three ran out. Randome staggered out to his car, where his wife waited for him, and she drove him to Community Hospital for treatment of his injuries, which included a possible concussion.

Two others were treated at Community Hospital and released. Frank Gonzales, who suffered a concussion, was to remain at the hospital for several days for observation.

Carmel Police Detective Pete Poitras responded immediately to an early morning call from the other officers on their regular nighttime beat. Investigation into the crime has occupied most of each day since.

Forestry panel wants D'Ambrosio in hard hat

CARMEL City Forester Greg D'Ambrosio has moved temporarily from the grit and grime of tree and beach management to the pristine world of city budgets — and has been the target of some good-natured ribbing as a result.

D'Ambrosio was selected to join Carmel City Administrator Douglas Schmitz and Harrison Memorial Library Director Peg Richter on a committee of city department administrators who put together the draft 1983-84 budget.

While the so-called "budget team" has been praised by the Carmel City Council, Forestry Commissioner Ray Taylor apparently would rather see D'Ambrosio back in his hard hat.

"We've got to get him back into the forest," Taylor told fellow commissioners last month.

Taylor refers to D'Ambrosio nowadays as "Shiny Pants."

Business Beat

Families make business news

By FLORENCE MASON

FAMILIES are making the business news again this week.

It's all in the family at KitchenArt — a new office in Carmel. Virginia Bell Bragg is the artist, husband Dick Bragg is mentor and paver-of-the-way through city licensing channels, and son Jess Bragg is the manager.

Bragg emphasized that the local license is for an office, not a retail store. Located on the west side of Mission Street behind Seger's Kitchen Designs, it is the company headquarters for wholesale art prints.

The name KitchenArt stems from Virginia Bell Bragg's watercolors intended mainly for kitchens. Prints of those watercolors are what's sold. Dick Bragg explains:

"We have been testing this business for the last year and think it's going to fly." The prints have been in 60 stores throughout the country, placed through manufacturers' representatives. They are also in two shops locally — Something Extra in the Barnyard and Raffles in Carmel Plaza.

There is already a change in the air for the company, a possible change of name and certainly a change of emphasis.

"So many people are collecting teddy bears that we want to continue all our lines but put an emphasis on paintings that include teddy bears," Bragg said. One I saw was of a typical nostalgia-inducing teddy bear in a child's rocker, surrounded by other toys. Delightful!

The Braggs have been in this area since 1965. Dick Bragg tends to downplay his role in the new company and gives more credit to his wife, the artist in the family, and to his son.

Dick, president of the Monterey County Board of Education, has a varied background that includes talk shows on radio. Son Jess Bragg is a graduate of the University of Pacific who now lives with his parents in Carmel and will work in the office full-time.

SISTERS IN SKIN CARE

Sisters who "just came together" in a business venture are the owners of a new skin care salon in Clocktower Place. Beth Bradbury and Annie Viglietti opened "Skin Deep" on the second floor of the Via Nona Marie complex last month.

The sisters offer a range of services "to cover all skin needs," electrology, which has been Beth Bradbury's specialty; deep pore cleansing; specialized treatments for such local problems as "sun repair." Wrinkles, too, come in for their attention.

"We're not just interested in female clients," Annie Viglietti told me. The interest of males in skin care is "coming to the public," she believes.

Beth and Annie have been active in fields that complement each other. Beth has been in business for herself as an electrologist and Annie most recently as the Arpel representative at Macy's.

Both were raised in Detroit and now live in Carmel. Beth came first, about 15 years ago. Annie came to Carmel three years ago to care for an elderly aunt. That was intended as a short stay, she said, but it turned out differently and she sounds very happy about that.

The new business partners also share an interest in outdoor activities and exercise — racquetball and swimming in particular.

THE CARDINALES EXPAND

"It just happened," Gaspar Cardinale said about his decision to open another business in Carmel Plaza.

Carmel Plaza Accessories is a separate business from his Cardinale's Fine Shoes shop, even though it is right next door and a door has been cut through from one shop to the other.

"Cardinale's is very small, only about 500 square feet," he said. Even so, the availability of the space next door didn't move Gasper Cardinale until his son, Vincent, and their partner, Sal Ursino, said: "We're going to do it with or without you." Finding himself out-voted, he agreed.

The new shop offers men's and women's accessories such as belts, briefcases, wallets, purses, ties and scarves.

HAND MADEN — IN A SPECIAL PLACE

The location of Olivia Shaffer's new business — in "the Mall" on San Carlos between Fifth and Sixth avenues — has special meaning for her. That's because she and her husband, Don, met at nearby Jack London's two years ago.

Mrs. Shaffer's store is the Hand Maden, a place where you can find quilts, quilting supplies, custom clothes and related accessories.

"Maden" is the correct spelling, she explained to the Carmel Business License and Code Review Board, because it calls attention to the idea that everything there is hand-made.

Much of it is custom work. Quilted vests and jackets are available, also ethnic clothing such as kimonos and Russian shirts. The quilts, too, have custom touches. For example, Olivia can work with blocks that include a baby's name. Her quilts can be used as wall hangings as well as bedding.

Which brings up something special about the way in which Olivia and her husband work together.

"I have a computerized sewing machine for monogramming and embroidery work, which can be utilized in quilts," she explained. "Don is head engineer for a large computer firm that has military accounts among other on the peninsula. He'll maintain my machine."

TONI DOYLE is director of sales and marketing for the Highlands Inn in Carmel Highlands.

Don Shaffer is at least partly responsible, too, for the couple's decision to settle on the peninsula. Olivia Shaffer said: "He doesn't want to live anywhere else, ever!"

She wants to be a resource for the people in the community more than she wants to attract tourists to her business. Quilting kits and instructions are available.

Mrs. Shaffer became interested in sewing because her mother sewed. "So I assumed I could," she noted. She sees sewing as an art form and quilts as best representing that art. She is interested in geneology, has traced her family tree, and has traveled a great deal throughout the United States, so quilting as an American craft form has special meaning for her too.

The business license board saw her shop as "the type of business we encourage."

"The women in town will appreciate it and the men will, too, when they get through," Planning Director Robert Griggs said.

Olivia Shaffer's comment, just before her May 15 opening: "I should have named the shop 'I'm sewing as fast as I can'!"

HE LIKES BEING OLD-FASHIONED

the Barber, who has been just an old-fashioned barber for 41 years.

The man who referred to himself as "an endangered species" has just become associated with the Mid Valley Barber Shop, in the Mid Valley Shopping Center. It's not only a change from his Alvarado Street Location; he's cutting back some too. He will be at the Mid Valley shop Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

Mel, who says he is not related to any perhaps more famous Monacoans, such as Prince Rainier, lives in Monterey with his second wife Irene, whose family (the Gorneros) have a long history on the peninsula. Between them, they have seven children.

One child — Frank — follows in his father's footsteps as a barber at the Naval Postgraduate School. Among the others there are two daughters who work for Wells Fargo Bank. Lisa works in the Carmel Rancho office and Mary in Carmel.

Mel is an opera fan and a friend of one special tenor — Luciano Pavarotti, whom he met when the famous tenor made his debut in La Boheme in 1967.

THE SPICE RACK COMETH

The Spice Rack has come to Carmel. John Stidham, owner of the Spice Rack in Monterey and Captain's Galley on Cannery Row, describes his newest venture as "an upgraded, international coffee shop." It takes over the space on Carmel Rancho Blvd. formerly occupied by Armando's and before that, by Jensen's.

Stidham looks forward to bringing success to a location not noted for successful operations in the past. He has done his homework, not only through experience in the two other restaurants he owns, but by studying the existing restaurants in the Carmel Rancho area. He saw a need for a coffee shop, especially one that serves breakfast as well as lunch and dinner.

He also chose the location because in his two years as manager of Sambo's during the 1970s, he made many business friends in the area. Since that time he has watched it grow and this looked like a good place for his next business endeavor.

Stidham's claim to having an "international" coffee shop is supported by his menus and his staff. "We have different specials every day, including Mexican, Japanese, Italian and Chinese dishes," he said. Then he mentioned his staff: "a Filipino chef, a Japanese manager, and a couple of Mexican cooks!"

Stidham will divide his time between the three restaurants, but expects to be at the local Spice Rack often. He and his wife, Roryann, who is co-owner of the businesses with him, live in Monterey. Their two children are Nicholas, 4, and Caylin, 1. When I asked him about his "hobbies," he laughed, and said, "For a person with three restaurants ...!"

THE HIGHLANDS INN IS BUZZING

Ronald Matthews refers to the new owners of Highlands Inn as "wonderful people with great plans for the property."

That makes his role as vice president and general manager of the inn "very exciting." He believes that everything in his hotel management career up to this point prepared him for this new role.

Matthews majored in education at Western Washington State College until he realized that hotel management was where he wanted to be. He already had considerable experience in the field by working in hotels in Hawaii, where he grew up. So he transferred as a sophomore to the school of hotel and restaurant management at San Francisco City College. After graduation his first job was in the Sheraton Hotel in San Francisco, then it was "back and forth" to Hawaii for 13 years, gathering experience and information.

Recently, Matthews was with the Hyatt Hotel in Monterey for more than six years. He lives in Monterey with his wife Sarah, a teacher's aide, and two sons. Craig is 15 and attends Robert Louis Stevenson School; Scott, 12, is a student at Colton Junior High.

The family enjoys traveling and skiing, and shares all the children's activities. There is also a remodeling project going on at home: "We're under construction here at the inn, and we're under construction at home!" Matthews said.

Staffing in the reorganized Highlands Inn is rounding out with Matthews' recent announcement of two appointments.

Cal Jepson is the new executive assistant manager. He is a veteran hotel executive who was formerly associated with the Hyatt Hotel organization in San Jose and in southern California. He graduated from Kent State University and lives in Carmel.

Another Carmel resident is the inn's new director of sales and marketing. Toni Doyle formerly was an assistant manager at San Francisco's Stanford Court Hotel and held sales and marketing posts at Hyatt Hotels in Atlanta, San Jose and Southern California.

She is originally from San Francisco and graduated from San Francisco College for Women (now part of the University of San Francisco).

Ms. Doyle is responsible for direction of all sales and marketing programs, including advertising and promotion, group sales, meetings and conventions and special events.

General manager Ronald Matthews also announced that the first phase of the inn's $30 million renovation, originally scheduled for mid-year 1983, is right on target.

TRAVELING WITH TASTE

Several Carmel restaurants are singled out for mention in "Traveling with Taste" in the June issue of Bon Appetit magazine.

"Many of (Carmel's) most creative and talented restaurants can be found in the kitchens of local restaurants," the article states. Brief descriptions of the culinary delights to be found at Casanova, Giuliano's and the Patisserie Boissiere follow. Also mentioned are Billy Quon's at the Crossroads and the Wagon Wheel in Valley Hills Center.

The article also quoted explorer Juan Cabrillo on the beauties of our coast and then concluded: "Were Cabrillo to visit the peninsula now, he would, no doubt, include a good word for the restaurants too."

NOTED

Glen Bradley, previously a contractor in Santa Monica, has joined the Carmel office of Founders Title Co. as business development and services representative.

The Conscience of Carmel

In praise of good teachers

By GUNNAR NORBERG

THE DAY these words appear in print — June 16 — a Monterey school teacher, Anne Bagby, will be honored in White House ceremonies for her contribution to a superior level of teaching.

This is at a time when the quality of teaching throughout the country frequently has been found wanting in many ways. This distinction comes to her because a former sixth-grade pupil, Marc Dalton — now a graduating high school senior — said it was Miss Bagby who had done the most to encourage and inspire him as a student.

And Marc Dalton has been chosen this year by President Reagan's Commission on Scholarship as one of a distinguished group of 141 high school seniors nationwide.

This honor to be given today to one fondly remembered teacher, reminds me of the special place reserved in the memories of men and women who have traced their own individual inspiration, while students, to the source or sources of that inspiration.

While I have had some 16 years of formal education, and many more years of informal education gained on my own in the half century since, the first — and probably most imporant — source of inspiration that most stimulated my own efforts to try to know and understand what had been thought and said and learned in the past, and to try to add some iota to all that in my own time, was a teacher.

That teacher was a man I remember only as Mr. Bergquist, though I believe he had earned a doctorate at Harvard. This man visited all the classrooms in our five schools in the small Minnesota town of Little Falls where I lived. But he did not teach in any one of them in the years when I knew him, since he was by that time the city school superintendent.

The place where he taught me and a half dozen other boys was a Sunday school which I regularly attended from my fifth grade until the last year in high school. There was, of course, a Bible verse or passage to learn as the assigned subject each Sunday, but there was also much more, and it was especially for that which we came early and stayed late, for several years beyond those usually spent by growing boys in Sunday school.

Mr. Bergquist had traveled widely and studied much and thought deeply, and he had an infectious enthusiasm and an ability to carry us with him to far places where he had been and into realms of complicated ideas — in plain language and with persuasive words.

Wide new vistas were opened to us and voyages of the mind led us into fascinating lanes which — without Mr. Bergquist — we might never have envisioned.

Later, when I reached Stanford, I heard profound lectures by professors of great distinction in their various fields. But only a comparative few were truly outstanding teachers, and still fewer could achieve the easy, instant empathy which made teaching fascinating to absorb and learning truly a joy. Two such teachers stand out in my mind as I think to the years just before and after 1930.

ONE OF THOSE teacher taught a subject which was often thought both difficult and useless. His name was Augustus Taber Murray and his subject was the Greek language and its literature in the classic Golden Age.

I took just one course in a Stanford summer session, taught by the great Greek scholar, Murray, but I will never forget it. It was a five-unit course which covered Greek grammar and the Anabasis of Xenophon.

However it wasn't the volume of work involved in that summer course which stands out in my mind, but the overwhelming enthusiasm with which it was taught and the vivid images which arose in one's mind as Dr. Murray's encyclopedic knowledge of ancient Athens flowed to enthralled students.

Hard study became an exciting journey into the distant past, and Dr. Murray's talks made it seem like a visit to a recent yesterday. Dr. Murray was in his middle 60s when I took his course, but the effervescence of his lectures had all the sparkle of youth and made the ancient world of Greece seem new and near.

The second great teacher I met at Stanford was its first president, David Starr Jordan, who visited Carmel in the 1880s when he was employed on a government survey on the Pacific Coast, after which he wrote the first enthusiastic description of then-pristine Carmel. This description later reached a nationwide readership in Scribner's Magazine.

Dr. Jordan was the long-retired chancellor emeritus of Stanford when I met him in 1927, and I had just written a long review for the Stanford Daily of a newly published book of his, The Higher Foolishness. My review had drawn a modest accolade from Dr. Jordan who was, I understood, not given to easy flattery.

(I still have his brief note, and I treasure it. It simply said "Let me thank you for the first review yet to appear on my Higher Foolishness. It is one of the best I am likely to see.")

When I talked with him as he sat in a cluttered office in the biology building at Stanford, he was the intense but subdued teacher and I was the only student before him.

His talk was profound and his wisdom reached across wide fields of learning and ranged over vast and disparate areas of thought. The inspiration which he had provided for many years to eager students at Cornell, at Butler University, at the University of Indiana, and finally at Stanford, was inspiring to me as I listened.

And the inspiration which Dr. Jordan conveyed so long to so many, originally had been inculcated by him, early in his career, by two summers spent in the presence of the great geologist and naturalist, Louis Agassiz, in a school on the island of Penikese, just off Cape Cod. Agassiz no doubt was just the kind of dedicated teacher which Dr. Jordan himself later became.

So today, when the quality of education is often in question and the quality of teaching is frequently suspect, it is heartening to see honored in the nation's capitol Ann Bagby, who is particularly remembered as the one teacher above all others who inspired one of the most distinguished of this year's graduating high school seniors — Marc Dalton — to give the greatest credit to her for what he has now achieved.

With such teachers teaching, there can certainly still be hope for education in America.

FOR DINNER WITH A MYSTERY DON'T MISS!

Agatha Christie Mystery, "Ten Little Indians"

This mystery drama opens Fri., June 17 at the 25 yr. old Studio Theatre Restaurant on Dolores St. in Carmel. The Title, "Ten Little Indians," refers to the cluster of statuettes on the mantelpiece of a wierd country home on an island off the coast of Devon, and to the nursery rhyme embossed above them – telling how each little Indian met his death – until there were none! For more information and reservations. Call 624-1661.

Usually, tucked in the glove compartment of every new car is the owner's manual. It tells you all the routine information about operating and servicing the car. Among other things, it explains the proper way to start the engine, how to change a flat tire and how to operate the heater, air conditioner and radio. It also tells you when to lubricate the car and when to change the engine oil. The manual also provides guides for minor troubleshooting and lists such vital specifications as the capacity of the gas tank, recommended tire pressures and types of fuses required for the electrical system. Be sure to take the time to read the manual thoroughly - learn as much as you can about your new car. If something isn't clear or you have any questions, call back and speak to your salesman or the service manager. They both want you to understand your car as well as you can.

By all means, shop before you buy. But, if you intend to compare out of town deals, don't make the mistake of going to see your local dealer first before you go out of town to compare prices.

Shop the out-of-town dealer first and then go to your local dealer. You'll usually find the local dealer will always meet or beat an out-of-town deal if it kills him. Remember, the smart buyer gets a good deal - he also doesn't buy too far away!

Soroptimists have a fun luncheon

By TERRI LEE ROBBE

Installation luncheons should be fun, which is exactly what happened when members of Soroptimist International of Carmel Bay installed officers at the Pine Inn June 8.

Dining tables were festively decorated with fresh floral arrangements and tender shrimp was piled high on the salad luncheon.

Although it was almost impossible to hear the beautiful music of classical guitarist Terrence Farrell through all the luncheon chatter, he was well applauded and the music certainly added to the festive atmosphere. Terrence said that "Farrell and Friends," meaning Terrance and Linda Purdy and Corinne Swall — two singers from the Mother Lode Opera troop — will perform in the Forest Theatre summer programs (July 10) sponsored by the city of Carmel.

"The music will be like that performed by the 'Divas' in the gold rush camps of California," Farrell said.

He also looks forward to his European tour (July 21-Aug. 12) with concerts for B.M.W. Corp. and plans to direct the International Classical Guitar Seminars of Bavaria.

During the luncheon, Soroptimist member Sandi Faass told the group at her table about the Punch and Judy Chapter installation luncheon which was to be the following evening at Monterey Peninsula Country Club. Sandi said guest speaker Jeanne San Carlos, a well-known local astrologer, would talk to the group about the fun side of astrology and also cast a horoscope for the club as well as the individual members.

Sandi recently returned from Los Angeles where she was on a buying trip for Holman's.

She stayed at the Hyatt Regency and said the biggest thrill of the trip was meeting football great Rosie Greer, whom she described as huge, "really huge!"

Club member Eileen Wright, executive director of the Monterey County Bar Association, also had some exciting news: the retirement dinner for Superior Court Judge Ralph Drummond in the Barbara McNitt Ballroom of the Naval Postgraduate School is July 7. Eileen, an admitted clothes-horse, looked beautiful in a black and white outfit and tried to decide what to wear to the big birthday bash for Georgia von Richter and Sue Dewar Friday, June 10. She finally chose a lovely lavender gown and wore matching flowers in her hair.

Father Lawrence Farrell, who passed up his regular Rotary meeting to attend the luncheon, gave the invocation and a short talk, "Words of Wit and Wisdom." Father Farrell has a wonderful sense of humor; he said that when he asked incoming president Lee Chamberlin what he should talk about she replied: "About 10 minutes!"

Betty Howard, chairwoman of International Goodwill and Understanding, Sierra Pacific Region, installed the new officers. They are: Lee Chamberlin, president; Duayne Ostergard, first vice-president; Jackie Richmond, second vice-president; Dorothy Hinton, recording secretary; Paulette Breen, corresponding secretary; and Judy Brooke, treasurer.

Also introduced were: Sally Conn, director; Tricia Doran, director; Sandy Faass, director; Sidney Slade, director.

Aileen Wright, senior delegate; Linda Lierman, alternate senior delegate; Sheila McMahan, junior delegate; and Sandy Faass, alternate junior delegate.

The determination of this group showed clearly when it came time to give the Pledge of Allegiance. There was no flag in the room so the group simply gave the allegiance while everyone faced an air-conditioning unit on the back wall.

Since all the Soroptimist members are businesswomen who meet during their regular lunch hours, paper work was forgotten and a few rules were broken for this special luncheon.

SUE AND GEORGIA FETED IN BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION

Colorful balloons, birthday cakes, delicious food and dancing to the music of Walt Tolleson's Band were all part of the birthday bash given for Sue Dewar and Georgia von Richter last Friday evening.

The black tie party was at the Pebble Beach home of Lucille Huntington and, with absolutely perfect weather, the 150 or so guests enjoyed an Italian feast at tables set up on Lucille's generous patio.

The town gossip line already touts the event as "the party of the season," and well it should be as all the details were in the capable hands of Sue's husband, Rod, and Georgia's son, Gordon von Richter of Los Altos, and of course the helping hands of many friends.

Both Georgia and Sue are well-liked and have so many friends that it was almost impossible to limit the guest list, but even with a house as large and roomy as Lucille's there is still only so much room, so it just had to be.

Along with cocktails and the traditional champagne birthday toasts there were caviar, hors d'oeuvres, and then a lasagne dinner with all the trimmings.

Tagged "120th celebration," Sue claimed 50 fabulous years and Georgia proudly owned up to the 70. We still have a way to go to top Willie Shakespeare's 419th — but someone is sure to go for it!

CARMELITE MAKES NEWS IN HAWAII

I'm frequently amazed at just how thoughtful some people can be. You can always tell a personal letter from a regular news release, and since I'm naturally curious I always open the personal letters first. Some are "thank you" notes while others hold all sorts of surprises.

Recently I received a letter addressed in red ink from a Susan Johnson of Carmel. Opening the letter, I pulled out a clipped out column from the Hawaii Report. It reads like a social column and is written by Don Chapman.

Underlined in red ink was the following: Caesar Romero, in town to attend his niece's wedding, stopped by the Royal Hawaiian Hotel on Saturday afternoon for the tea dance with Del Courtney's orchestra."

Also underlined: "Lavonne West says she's having a tough time keeping up with her 87-year-old father, Al Ferrera of Carmel, Calif. Among his Hawaii vacation activities has been learning to fly a glider."

Carmel Coordinating Service celebrates its grand opening

Sunday, June 5 was an exciting day for Marian Fischer. Marian recently opened a new business, with offices in the Doud Arcade, called Carmel Coordinating Service.

Marian is a whiz at taking care of all those little details that most people just don't want to fuss with, such as hiring singers, musicians, flowers, wedding cakes and anything or anyone else that may be needed to pull off the perfect party or function.

The offices include a room where weddings are performed and consultation room.

To get the news business off on the right foot, Marian treated about 185 friends and local business people to a champagne party at the offices on June 5. Not only was the party a smash success, but the wedding room was unexpectedly used.

It was the second time around for Chester and Marjorie Mahurin of Bakersfield, who were married and then divorced a couple of years ago. As they arrived early, they informed Marian that they would like to "tie the knot" during the party festivities. Marion asked then to return at 2 p.m., at which time she gave the bride a lovely orchid corsage and the Rev. Robert Tarr performed the ceremony.

The wedding (and party) feast included an array of hot and cold hors d'oeuvres and, naturally, there was no lack of champagne.

Those who gave a helping hand with the party chores included Joyce Farris, Kaye Parsons, Jean Lichti and Diana Peterson. Diana is the daughter of Marian and Assistant Carmel Police Chief Bob Fischer, and she spent two weeks on vacation in Carmel to visit her parents. She hails from Flagstaff, Ariz.

MARRIED during the champagne opening of the Carmel Coordinating Service were Chester and Marjorie Mahurin. The Rev. Robert Tarr performed the ceremony.

BENEFIT FOR ARTHRITIS FOUNDATION

The evening will begin at 7 p.m. with cocktails and dancing to the music of the Guy Lombardo Orchestra. Next will come the dinner-fashion show, and then more dancing.

The fall collection of clothes and furs will be flown in from Sak's Fifth Avenue of New York and will feature the latest collection of suits, cocktail and party dresses and Revillon furs.

Local beauties will model in the parade of fashion coordinated by Phyllis Hubbard.

Tickets are $100 per person, tax deductible, and reservations may be made through Mrs. Maggie Eastwood, P.O. Box 1487, Monterey, Calif. 93942.

GOLF MATCH TO BENEFIT VISITING NURSE ASSOCIATION

Rancho Canada Golf Club will be the scene of the Monterey County Housing Industry's Second Annual Open House to benefit the Visiting Nurse Association. The event will be Friday, June 24.

After the tournament, there will be a no-host cocktail hour followed by an awards dinner in the banquet room at 6 p.m. After dinner, there will be a prize drawing.

The golf format is a four "person" scramble and those who don't play golf are urged to sign up for the dinner. The $50 entry fee (tax deductible) includes green fee, the use of half of a powered golf cart, dinner and all prizes. The dinner alone is $20.

Those who wish to participate should make checks payable to Open House Golf, P.O. Box 22346, Carmel, Calif. 93921 before June 17.

The event is sponsored by the title companies, realtors, lenders, contractors, architects, accountants and builders of the Monterey Peninsula.

For further information, call committee members Kit Manning at 625-3880, Milt Hardesty at 625-5676, Dick Schofield at 625-4100 or Holly Carberry at 624-6886.

MARIAN FISCHER, owner of the recently opened Carmel Coordinating Service, invited friends and local business people to a champagne opening at the Doud Arcade on June 5. Among the 185 guests were Sal and Linda Mercurio.

CARRIE HENDERSON OF CARMEL ELECTED VICE PRESIDENT OF YORK SCHOOL STUDENT BODY

Carrie Henderson of Carmel has been elected vice president of the York School Student Body. She is the daughter of Linda Henderson and Stephen Henderson of Carmel.

With two other student officers, she will be responsible for leadership in student government, and for student activities and events for the year 1983/84. She was elected by an all-school vote and will work with elected class representatives throughout the year.

York student Louise Boone of Carmel Valley placed third in the Northern California Latin contest, advanced level. Louise, a senior, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Boone.

Trashy novel gives the reader little

By JEAN THURMAN

Possession by Ann Rule. (W.W. Norton & Co., Inc., $15.50. 348 pages.)

THIS IS the kind of trashy novel that grips you so tightly you can't possibly put it down, but leaves you with nothing. Possession has pretensions towards psychological analysis, but it really just exploits terror.

The villain of the piece is a tall, handsome, extremely bright, but deranged young man. His none-too-bright mother ran off and joined the carnival as an exotic dancer, had a child which she named Duane Elvis Demich, then died about five years later. The child grew up with a fixation on his mother, and searches out young women who resemble her, then rapes and murders them in order to possess them.

The heroine Joanne Lindstrom and her policeman husband Danny take a much-needed vacation hike in the wilderness in order to resolve their marital difficulties. Demich has decided on Joanne as his next victim and follows them into the wilderness.

Demich kills Danny and explains to Joanne that a grizzly bear killed her husband and now he — Duane — will save her. He will lead her out of the wilderness, but she must be grateful to him and depend on him. She gets hysterical and scratches and bites Demich, but eventually she believes him and follows him in a state of shock. That night he rapes her, and her condition rapidly deteriorates to madness.

She forgets who her husband is, forgets what this man has done to her, and becomes his insatiable lover. She nurses him through an infection caused by her defensive bites, and forgets that she caused his illness.

Meanwhile her husband's partner, Sam Clinton, begins to wonder where Danny has gone. Sam is a recovered alcoholic and survivor of two divorces. He has little to live for besides his job, and he loves his partners like he used to love his booze.

When Danny and Joanne are several days late and nobody has heard a word from them, Sam throws his job to the winds and follows the couple into the wilderness. He picks up the trail where he knows they went and finds Danny's body, covered with what look like claw and teeth marks.

The forest rangers and sheriff's office try to convince Sam that Danny was killed by a bear, and Joanne probably has met the same fate, but Sam refuses to believe that. When the sheriff's half-hearted search peters out, Sam hires an Indian guide, and goes in search of Joanne himself.

Most books of this nature would end as the hero rescues the damsel-in-distress at the last minute, but this hero discovers his damsel has no desire to be rescued. She only wants to kill him, or at least ruin him for destroying her idyllic life with her possessor.

ANN RULE tries hard to explain Demich's behavior and Joanne's reaction in psychological terms. Demich had a fragile, timid mother who never was there when he needed her, and then wasn't there at all anymore.

He often witnessed her making love to men he didn't know, and hated them for hurting his mother. He wanted to possess her all for himself, and when he was grown up he tried up possess her through substitutes.

"I always knew you," he tells Joanne. "All the times we were together, you always needed me. When I had to leave you, you died. But when you left me, I was stronger. I was always stronger because you belonged to me, and I possessed your soul. I never let it go, but you hurt me when you went away."

This is as confusing to Joanne as it is to the reader, but she tries desperately to understand and even sympathize. She is a very timid person — like Demich's mother — and was completely dependent on her husband. She has no inner strength and an unformed character. When Demich is the only person she can turn to, she turns to him wholeheartedly.

The characters and plot are strong for a first novel. Rule's only previous book was a work of non-fiction, The Stranger Beside Me, about killer Ted Bundy. Her knowledge of police and court procedures make the search and prosecution as exciting as the stalking of the victim.

Her best character is a minor one, Nina Armitage, who stepped right out of one of John D. MacDonald's Travis McGee novels. She is a tough, independent hard-drinking woman lawyer who lives on a houseboat with her cat. She is Sam's former lover, and defends him when the hero ends up looking like the villain.

The suspense is strong all the way through, but there is only one plot surprise. Most of the book is very predictable. Although it is frightening while you read it, it leaves no terror afterwards.

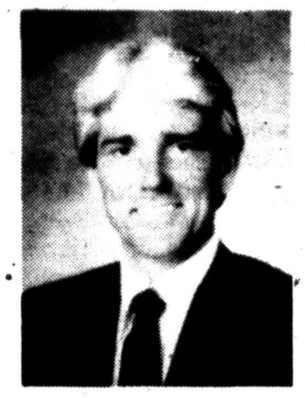
Selecting your portfolio



By RICH COSTA AND JOHN BURROUGHS
Burroughs, Coast & Associates

The Dow Jones Industrial Average has advanced from approximately 820 to more than 1,200 all within the past year.

For those on the ground floor of this historic advance, there's the distinct possibility to have a fat stock portfolio. However, for the new investor entering the market, I'm sure there's a bit of apprehension — will it go higher, will it go lower?

Since answering that question can be similar to determining how many angels will fit on the head of a pin, we decided to inquire how some brokerage firms perceive the market.

After calling Dan Tibbits, manager of the local Dean Witter Reynolds office, we asked how Dean Witter Reynolds research department looks at the market from this level.

According to Dan, Dean Witter Reynolds Research anticipates a 10 to 15 percent pull back in the market from the 1,200 level, whereupon it should recover and go much higher by the end of the year. In addition they feel a correction is due in the high technology stocks.

Before you dive for the bomb shelter you may find consolation in the fact where there's risk there's opportunity. According to Dan, Dean Witter Reynolds believes the energy stocks — notably Standard Oil of Ohio, Exxon, Texaco and Arco — provide a buying opportunity at this level of the market.

Because of our publication deadline other brokerage firms in the Carmel/Monterey area were unable to provide input. However, I'm sure if you check out their respective research recommendations you will find some interesting variations.

The battle of the research departments has always been an area of interest. Why one firm likes "ABC stock" while the other prefers "Corporation X" will continue to baffle the investor when on the surface they both appear the same.

This difficulty in assessing a particular stock selection has caused many new and old investors to explore mutual funds where diversification and selection of the individual issues is part of the management package provided by the respective fund.

Consequently when you boil everything down, stock selections and management are the key to potential profit or loss in the market.

Agreeing that all Brokerage recommendations have merit, the distinguishing factor would be when they should be followed.

This brings to light a common oversight on the part of the broker and investor — the technical profile of the stock in question.

A technical profile or opinion is no more than an analysis of the patterns of price changes, rates of change and changes in volume on a stock. From this, many timing decisions as to where or when you should purchase or sell a stock are based.

There are probably as many theories on investments as homes in Carmel. Each one advertised as a short cut to riches. Whatever theory you employ, remember that profit may be a little more difficult to extract at this point in the market. It may involve a little more personal attention to your portfolio.

Credit unions find a place on peninsula

By BRUCE BERTSCHMAN

Everyone knows the Monterey Peninsula has more than its share of banks, savings and loans, finance companies, and brokerage houses — just to name the better-known financial institutions — but did you know that several credit unions also make their home here?

One way or another, everyone on the peninsula is eligible to join one or more of these credit unions: Fort Ord Federal Credit Union, Provident Central Credit Union, Knights of Columbus Credit Union, Peninsula Herald Federal Credit Union, and Monterey Federal Credit Union. Others may belong to credit unions whose offices may not even be located on the peninsula (for example, McGraw Hill, and, yes, Merrill Lynch have their own credit unions).

Just, then, what exactly are credit unions and why would one want to belong? Very simply, credit unions are cooperatively-owned financial organizations that provide much the same financial services you see elsewhere, but they provide these to their members only. There are no stockholders. The members themselves "own" their own organization so to speak and thereby come to have a say in how the organization is run.

Members' savings deposits (or "shares") are loaned out to other members. The interest on the loans is then used to pay expenses and returned to the members in the form of interest ("dividends") on their savings. No middleman in the form of the stockholder. This way of doing business enables the credit union to hold expenses down and thereby pay traditionally higher interest on savings, while charging less interest on loans, than profit-making financial institutions.

As non-profit organizations, credit unions also enjoy certain legal and regulatory advantages that other institutions do not enjoy. For instance, credit unions were the first major depository institution to be totally deregulated — empowering them to pay higher interest rates on savings than banks or savings and loans. Naturally, many credit unions took full advantage of this to attract new members and new savings deposits.

Credit Unions have come a long way from the days they were looked upon as convenient employee fringe benefit providing payroll savings plans and very favorable consumer loan terms. While these are still the mainstay of credit unions, many of them have developed into full-service financial organizations providing savings certificates, IRAs, checking, real estate loans.

Two calls to duty merit the hearty response of Carmel residents. You are asked to cooperate in a cleanup campaign, and to decorate your premises during Fourth of July week. These two matters must not be neglected. Personal pride as well as civic decency commands.

TEACHERS GET RAISE, NOT LAVISH BUT COMPARABLE

The Carmel School District teachers received their long-awaited (since February) salary increase at an adjourned meeting of the school board Tuesday night. It was not the schedule proposed in February but one scaled down several days before the meeting to fit the funds available in the tentative budget, which was also prepared several days before the meeting.

"It is not a lavish schedule but comparable to other schools in the area," Raymond Gere, representing the teachers, commented.

The new schedule sets starting pay at $4,400 and top at $7,700. The February schedule provided for a low of $4,500 and high of $7,950. Current schedule starts at $4,300 and goes to $7,000.

Money was found for the pay raise by relieving the over-ride tax revenue of the site purchase item and finding it in the bond issue; also through anticipated federal compensation for educating federally connected students in the Carmel schools.

Bids for high school and River School classroom construction were lower than architect's estimates, leaving funds in the $800,000 bond issue for site purchase, an item that had been included in the 50 cent over-ride tax, but could be legally transferred.

COUNCIL POSTPONES CONSTRUCTION MORATORIUM ACTION

City council members have postponed action on a recommendation by Councilman Gunnar Norberg to declare a moratorium on construction in commercial areas until the July 3 council meeting.

The council hesitated, at its regular meeting last Tuesday night, to take any immediate action on Norberg's proposal since it did not appear as a regular agenda item.

Norberg's proposed ordinance would halt construction in the commercial district of the city while a study of the city's needs was being conducted.

"There seems to be a great deal of concern about burgeoning construction," Norberg said, terming the situation "another time of crisis."

He said the "most immediate way of controlling it is the passing of an interim ordinance."

C.V. RANCH SELLS 120 MEMBERSHIPS

It took only two days to sell all 120 charter memberships in the recently opened Carmel Valley Ranch Tennis Club. Each membership sold for $400.

Developers now have filed for a use permit that would allow them to add eight more courts and sell an additional 240 memberships. The regular memberships would cost $800.

Project manager Kaye Chandler said all the memberships sold out by closing time on Sunday, June 4, after the grand opening of the club the previous day. Most of them were purchased by Valley residents, he said, with individuals in Monterey and other peninsula cities also buying into the club.

If Monterey County officials approve the additional eight courts, the club membership would reach 360 at the top level, according to Chandler.

The court locations have been moved from the west side of the main clubhouse to the east side, he said. Representatives of St. Dunstan's Episcopal Church on Robinson Canyon Road had complained about the proximity between the church and the planned courts.

Chandler said the new courts would be similar to the three visible from Carmel Valley Road, surrounded by landscaping and bordered by raised earth berms. The Specific Plan for the ranch permits the 12 courts.

No hearing date has been set on the application.

Father Farrell's wisdom

Stevenson's prayer

CARMEL ROTARY CLUB, LA PLAYA HOTEL
In 1876 Robert Louis Balfour Stevenson, while living in Fontainebleau, south of Paris, met Fanny Vandergrift Osbourne of Monterey. They fell in love and when she returned to Monterey, Stevenson followed in August of 1879 and they were married the next year.
I discovered an early edition of Stevenson's essays during my recent housecleaning. The book was published two years after his death in 1896. It contained a violent and passionate defense of Father Damien, who gave his life in the service of the lepers of Molokai. It is a classic diatribe against Damien's detractor, the Rev. Dr. Hyde.
Stevenson and his family settled at Vailima, in Samoa. As a patriarch, he gathered his family and his Samoan servants for evening prayers. Stevenson became angry with a fellow Scot, an alcoholic who visited him at Vailima. He verbally castigated him and then ordered him from his home.
That evening he recited this contrite prayer: "Oh Lord, enlighten us to see the beam that is in our own eye, and blind us to the mote that is in our brothers. Let us feel our offenses with our hands, make them great and bright before us, like the sun, make us eat them and drink them for our diet. Blind us to the offenses of our neighbor, cleanse them from our memories and take them out of our mouths forever. Help us with the grace of courage; touch us with fire from the altar that we may be up and doing, to rebuild our city; in the name and by the method of Him in whose name and prayer we now conclude." Amen.

Will you soon be joining the ranks of seniors who wear hearing aids? Here are some tips: avoid noisy places at first; listen to general household sounds and learn to put them in the background again; if you've developed a habit of speaking too loudly work to check it; realize that a hearing aid is a mechanical device which only makes sounds louder and cannot restore perfect hearing.

A 12-year study by Johns Hopkins University found that remarriage in later life is good for your health, especially if you're a man. Widowers in the 55-to-64 age range showed a 50 percet lower mortality rate for those who remarried compared with those who did not.

Film review:

'WarGames' a tidy fable

By LISA JENSEN

WarGames*. With Matthew Broderick, Dabney Coleman and Ally Sheedy. Written by Lawrence Lasker and Walter F. Parkes. Directed by John Badham. An MGM/UA Release. Rated PG.

WARGAMES is a tidy little suspense fable about the ultimate video arcade game in which the stakes are not mere quarters, but the possible nuclear destruction of the planet.

Directed by John Badham (the software alternative to his current hardware hit Blue Thunder), it offers a thematic conflict between human and electronic intelligence and a succinct anti-nuke message, all wrapped up in a kind of "Boy's Own" adventure in which an ordinary teenage hero literally has to save the world.

The protagonist is Seattle high school senior David Lightman (Matthew Broderick). An indifferent student in class, he's a video game whiz-kid who uses the massive banks of home computer equipment in his bedroom to tap into the school computer system and change his grades or fool around with other private systems for kicks.

When David sees a catalogue for a new line of computer games from an electronics firm in Sunnyvale, he tries to plug into their system to steal the games for his own use.

Through a random combination of code numbers, however, he unwittingly plugs into a real military computer, the WOPR (War Operation Plan Response), which constantly plays hypothetical war games and devises appropriate defense strategy at the top-secret North American Air Defense (NORAD) facility in the Colorado Rockies.

David and his girlfriend Jennifer (Ally Sheedy) blithely punch up a "game" called "Global Thermonuclear War," unaware that when they launch Soviet subs at the Gulf Coast and a nuclear warhead toward Las Vegas, identical images are causing a red alert on the radar screens at NORAD. When David figures out what's going on and tries to stop the game, it's too late. The stubborn supercomputer won't quit until somebody "wins."

And this is only the beginning of David's adventures. Abducted by the FBI and interrogated as an enemy spy, he's resourceful enough to rig an electronic door lock and escape. With "game time" running out, he searches for the eccentric engineer who designed the WOPR and has since retired to private life under an assumed identity (and who, in the best mythological tradition, turns out to be a kind of spiritual father to David, having lost his own son years earlier), hoping to learn how to de-program the machine. In the big finale, David is back at the NORAD keyboard, desperately trying to outwit the WOPR in the final seconds before it plunges the world into World War III.

What makes any of this remotely credible is the engaging performance of Matthew Broderick (last seen in a few bright moments as Marsha Mason's son in the otherwise joyless Max Dugan Returns). His David is no omnipotent superhero, but a perfectly life-size kid's kid restlessly poised on the brink of adulthood — awkward, eager and maybe a little too bright for his own good.

Woven throughout David's story is a running debate on whether humans or computers should be trusted with the final fail-safe decision in the event of international crisis. But these issues evaporate in the film's final message (a bit heavy-handed, but still surprisingly effective) in which a nuclear war is compared — and literally reduced — to a game of tic-tac-toe that neither side can win.

WarGames doesn't always make sense. It's not clear how David's methodical electronic siege of computer codes in Sunnyvale leads him to the WOPR in Colorado. And in a confusing early scene of missile silo guardians responding to a nuclear alarm, Badham throws in a lot of cheap-thrill shots of missiles actually being unsheathed and moved into launch position, although we're later told it was only a drill.

But there's enough modest suspense, low-key humor and solid acting to keep the story moving. (Pert Sheedy and especially craggy John Wood as the disillusioned computer genius who'd as soon let the world blow up so "nature can start over again" are both quite good.) WarGames' reworking of romantic-humanist themes within this trendy, "hands-on" hi-tech context will probably have a special appeal to dreamy adolescents of all ages.

What's playing at the movies

An Officer and a Gentleman: A story of how boys become men during the Navy's officers' training program and the romances they had with the town girls. Louis Gossett, Jr., is superb as a tough drill sergeant. Richard Gere and Debra Winger as the young officer and his independent girlfriend are portrayed as lovers in a fresh and honest way. Rated R. At the Valley Cinema.

Blue Thunder: A fast-moving, hard-edged action spectacle about a sophisticated helicopter that is unleashed on the Los Angeles Police Department, with Roy Scheider at the controls. Riveting aerial scenes in which it appears that half of L.A. is levelled. Rated R. At the State Three Cinemas.

Breathless: Richard Gere is Jesse Lujak, bad news but irresistible. In no time flat he is a desperado in search of his fantasy lady, Monica, played by the French actress Valerie Kaprisky. She is the realist momentarily caught up in Jesse's considerable charms. Rated R. At the Hill Theatre.

Chained Heat: Linda Purl is in a woman's prison and wants to get out but she hasn't got much of a chance. A violent women's prison film designed to exploit female-to-female combat of every kind. Rated R. At the Hill Theatre.

Flashdance: Alex Owens, a beautiful and talented dancer, supports her creative endeavors by working as a welder by day and a dancer by night. Rated R. At the Valley Cinema.

La Traviata: A delightful musical tribute to Giuseppe Verdi's opera of the same name that will be enjoyed by opera lovers and non-opera lovers alike. Placido Domingo as Alfredo is handsome and stirring in voice, presence and conviction while Teresa Stratas' Violetta is a vivid, intense and memorable portrayal. Rated G. At the Dream Theater.

Monty Python's The Meaning of Life: With irreverence, rude words, an offhand frankness about what used to be thought of as private parts and one scene of breathtaking grossness, the Pythons are back, more brilliant than ever. Rated R. At the Center Cinemas.

Octopussy: This is the 13th screen adventure of Ian Fleming's suave Agent 007 with Roger Moore who stars as Bond for the sixth time. The story takes Bond to a magically beautiful site in Udaipur, India in search of an international jewelry smuggling ring that has murdered British Agent 009. There he meets an exotic, stately woman named Octopussy, played by Maud Adams. Nearby is an exiled Afghan prince named Kamal Khan, played with oily grandeur by Louis Jourdan. The plot continues with non-stop action and intrigue. Rated R. At the Carmel Village Theatre.

Psycho II: Bathtime is playtime as Norman Bates returns home in this sequel to the classic thriller starring Anthony Perkins as the quirky, rehabilitated Bates, whose penchant for running into the best assortment of cutlery in town is exceeded only by his willingness to be a regular guy. Vera Miles reprises her role with a vengeance: she'll do anything to see Norman back in the institution. Rated R. At the State Three Cinemas.

Return of the Jedi: The new film which continues George Lucas' epic adventure which began with Star Wars and The Empire Strikes Back, is packed with action and surprises which answer all of the saga's previously unresolved questions. It concludes the middle third of the nine-part series which Lucas has conceived as three trilogies. Mark Hamill returns as Luke Skywalker, Harrison Ford as Han Solo and Carrie Fisher as Princess Leia Organa. Billy Dee Williams is Lando Calrissian and Anthony Daniels returns as See-Threepio. Rated PG. At Cinema 70.

The Man With Two Brains: Steve Martin's dazed heart — smitten by Kathleen Turner — affects his rational powers as a surgeon. Rated R. At the Center Cinemas.

Tootsie: When Dustin Hoffman cannot find work as an actor, he tries and succeeds as an actress. Lots of good fun and some tender moments result when Hoffman, as masquerading Tootsie, falls in love with his girlfriend. With Jessica Lange, Charles Durning and Bill Murray. Rated PG. At the Golden Bough Theatre.

Trading Places: A satire on the art of American avarice, Dan Aykroyd and Eddie Murphy play two men whose paths were never meant to cross. Aykroyd is wealthy, then out on the streets and Murphy is a born hustler, a born loser and within the plot, a suddenly rich hustler. With Ralph Bellamy and Don Ameche as the conniving Duke brothers. Rated R. At the Center Cinemas.

Victor/Victoria: Genial low-intensity farce about sex roles and transvestitism, written and directed by Blake Edwards. Julie Andrews is Victoria, an out-of-work coloratura in the Paris of 1934, who is taken in by Robert Preston's Toddy, a gay-cabaret performer and man-about-town. James Garner plays a visiting Chicago gangster disturbingly attracted to "Victor" and amusing complications ensue. With Alex Karras. Rated PG. At the Golden Bough Theatre.

WarGames: David Lightman, played by Matthew Broderick, has only one interest in life — the world he escapes to through his home computer. By dialing the telephone and inserting a program into his machine, he "hitchhikes" through his universe, travelling on vast communications networks and "talking" to people like himself. Along the way, he also taps into huge computer banks and changes data. One day he unwittingly crossed paths with the biggest games program in the world — the Defense Department's wargames computer, Joshua. Rated PG. At the State Three Cinemas.

How to personalize your ceremony

More and more couples today are getting involved personally in planning their own wedding ceremonies, a trend which is all to the good. In fact, psychologists have found that couples who actively participate in planning, and sometimes writing, their own wedding vows tend to have more stable marriages than those who merely recite the standard vows without understanding their true meaning.

That doesn't mean, of course, that anything goes in today's weddings. There are some parts of the wedding ritual that can't be changed. It does mean, however, that sometime during your busy prewedding schedule you and your fiance should take some time to go over the words of the ceremony with your glergyman. You may find, as many couples do, that you like them just the way they are. Or you may decide to add a favorite poem or a few words of your own. You'll find most clergyman are quite willing to work with you to create a personalized ceremony that will have a real and lasting meaning.

There are other ways to personalize your wedding as well, all within the bounds of proper etiquette. For instance, it's not necessary to walk dow the aisle to organ music. You can have a single violin, a classical guitar, even a trumpet. Or you might involve your guests in the celebration by asking them to sing.

One New York couple added a personal touch to their wedding by inviting each of their guests to bring a bell and ring it in celebration of their marriage. Significantly, these two were both professional marriage counselors who wanted to make their wedding a memorable experience.

Whether you're planning an elaborate formal wedding with all the trimmings or a quiet wedding at home, remember one thing; you are celebrating the most important occasion in your life—the day when two separate people become one. It should be joyous. It should be dignified. Above all, it should be yours.

WHAT TO WEAR

The size of the wedding, the time of day, the location, and the formality of the bride's dress are what determine the style of the wedding. This chart is a guide to assist you with everyone's attire, but it is always subject to changes in fashion. For example, styles in menswear have become more versatile. Local formalwear specialists throughout the country can advise you on the newest choice for rental or purchase. Your personal preferences guided by your Bridal Consultant's advice will help you plan a beautiful wedding. In a second marriage, the bride should feel free to follow her wishes and white is a valid choice.

Facts about a bridal gift registry

What is a Bridal Gift Registry?
Department and specialty stores offer this service free. It gives you the opportunity to list the items you and your fiance would like to receive as gifts. It makes gift choosing easy for relatives and friends and lets you receive only the gifts you really want!

Why should you register?
Besides making shopping easier for those who are selecting gifts for you, they can also be assured that their selection is something you need and want. You'll also avoid getting duplicate gifts, things of the wrong color and having to return gifts you can't use.

When should you register?
Immediately after you become engaged. Friends and family will want to know what to give you for engagement parties and bridal showers, too.

Who should register?
You and your fiance will be sharing your home after the wedding, so you should both take part in registering your preferences in gifts.

What should you register?
Nearly everything you could imagine you'd need to set up a home is included on most registry forms (too many to list here!).

How do you register?
Once you've decided on an over-all style you want for your home and the colors you want to use within, review the list together. The Bridal Gift Registrar at the store where you register will assist you in filling out the form which your gifts will be chosen and checked off. She can also answer your questions concerning the coordination of all the elements you need to create a harmonious environment for your new home. If the store where you register has branches in other cities, your selections will also be recorded there so that guests may shop in whichever store is most convenient for them.

The Complete Kitchen Bridal Registry
Only at THE PEPPERCORN

THE GOOD SPIRIT OF THE COUNTRY KITCHEN

At The Peppercorn you can rediscover the spirit of the country kitchen, a place of scoured metals, shiny porcelain and scrubbed wood. When you remember those huge pots of steaming home-grown vegetables, rows of Mason jars, tender meats roasting in a wood stove—well, it's only natural you would think of The Peppercorn. The Peppercorn is a special cookware store, a very comfortable one. Found here are the tools to make any kitchen complete, from basic utensils to the specialty items that make complex tasks simple.

The Peppercorn is also a restaurant. Featured are modestly priced sandwiches, and delicious homemade soups, including Four-day Lentil Soup, which is said to be among the best to be had in this part of the country. Breakfasts begin at 8:00 a.m. and lunch is served from 10-4.

The Peppercorn is also a learning place. Presented are demonstrations of the preparation of specific dishes, among which are baked strawberry pie, quiche, squid, crepes, puff pastry, and many more uniquely exotic tasty treats.

The Peppercorn has become the major cooking service store on the Peninsula, at least, and probably is one of the most complete in California. THE STILLWATER Yacht Club Mercury Fleet championship races continue Sunday, June 19 with the first fleet race scheduled to begin at 12 noon on Wharf Number Two in Monterey. A second race will follow shortly thereafter as participants compete in the 10 race event that ends Aug. 21. Mercuries will abound on the bay as the Monterey Peninsula Yacht Club also hosts their Mercury fleet race at the same time. (Photo courtesy of Ray Johnson.)

the home of the Stillwater Yacht Club Commodore Courtney Hanson.

"I just received a letter from John B. Morse who said his father founded the Stillwater Yacht Club in 1924; however, the club, as a legal entity, was formed by Matt Jenkins in 1948," Hanson explained. Comprised mainly of members of the Beach Club in Pebble Beach, the Stillwater Yacht Club was formed to sail primarily in Stillwater Cove in Pebble Beach.

"The first event scheduled was a Mercury race because many members of the club had Mercuries they used to launch off the old pier," Hanson added. The Mercury sailboat was designed in 1937 by Ernie Nuniz of San Francisco. It was displayed at the 1939 World's Fair in San Francisco. It was created out of a new marine construction material — marine plywood.

"Since the pier is unusable at this time with rust in the pilings and since the storms other pilings are at strange angles, we've had to launch our boats in Monterey Bay. The first fleet race is scheduled for a noon start and the second race follows shortly thereafter. The Monterey Peninsula Yacht Club race also takes off at the same time and we both follow the same course," Hanson said.

The first race began on May 8 and two "throwouts" are allowed by the end of the race on Aug. 21. "The contestants are allowed to throw out the two worst scores of the 10 races," Hanson explained. The races are open to all age groups.

Representative sailors include, for example: retired Army Col. Oliver Wood, retired stockbroker Lee Gould; Tom Duffy, an attorney in Monterey; and Diane Marks, who is finishing her freshman year in college.

"In a good breeze we'll set the marks out so that the race will be about an hour and a half long. The people of the Monterey Peninsula Yacht Club takes care of the race committee work and the permanent markers that are out in the bay which we also use on occasion," Hanson added.

THE MONTEREY County Health Department has given Stillwater Cove permission for water sports.

The Beach and Tennis Club will help the Stillwater Yacht Club put in a small landing dock for shore boats so yacht club members won't have to walk through the surf to get into the shore boat to get out to their yachts which can be moored during the summer in Stillwater Cove.

"On Sunday, June 25 we plan to bring the Mercuries from Monterey to Stillwater," Hanson said. "It will be a survival test for these little boats to make the 12-mile trip out into the ocean and around. We also plan to bring several of the larger boats around and moor them in the cove."

On Saturday, July 2 the Matthew C. Jenkins Mercury Regatta will be run from Stillwater Cove, with the final race scheduled for Sunday, July 3. There will also be a Sundial Regatta Saturday, July 9 and Sunday, July 10.

"We have scheduled three weeks of yachting activity in the cove to include Mercury races and beach parties. We hope to see many of our members mooring their cruising boats at Stillwater through the summer," Hanson said.

Visitors to the Peninsula will enjoy watching the Mercury Fleet championship races on Monterey Bay but, according to Hanson, the best way to watch a race is from another boat.

Music corner

Dance concert: impulsive fun

By SCOTT MACCLELLAND

SAN FRANCISCO Jazz Dance brought both choreography and jazzercise to Sunset Theater last Saturday and argued mostly for solid, earth-rooted consistency, symmetrical posings and good old rock 'n roll.

Company directors Wendy Ballard and Deborah Adams designed most of the choreography seen in a program of seven different scenes. The one exception was the three-part Suite Manhattan which showed the most choreographic freedom and confidence of the evening and which best complemented the technical abilities of the dancers (including Mss. Adams and Ballard).

Suite Manhattan, the creation of Alan Scofield, opened with four women against the soloistic focus of Jay Johanni in a spoof of 50s and 60s rock and style. The degree of individuation gave the dancers more interpretive latitude than that called for by the previous, tightly doubled ensembles. It was impulsive fun that set the piece apart from most of the rest of the evening.

The second part of the triptych featured formal tails and dancing flair in high Manhattan chorus-line style. Part three recalled the five dancers from the first part, in different costumes for a lengthy but inventive Birdland, a forcefully intense conception, full of fancy and invention which reflected the mercurial impulses of the continuing music of Manhattan Transfer. Gestures and turns in the piece underwent imitation and development but with a more deft hand, instead of the predictable doublings and canons seen earlier and later.

An inspired stride in the second half was seen in Ms. Adams' 40s Motif, another triptych of even more whimsy and no less fancy. A percussion pattern by Bob Crosby and the BobCats riveted the first scene to synthetic pastel moves by three women and two business-suited men, all under eye-concealing hat brims.

Part two was an intensely close Saturday-night special by Jay Johanni and Terry Roberts to a smoothed Glenn Miller recording of Slaughter on 10th Avenue. Miller prevailed in the finale, a revue-style routine by six khaki-clad military misses, complete with Boop-bottoms and "we-want-you" salutes.

Wendy Ballard's Spectre di sentiment needed lots of imitation, as did her earlier work, but showed less dependency on symmetry and its descendent echoes, characteristics still prevalent and still in need of expressive justification, unless televisions's Solid Gold does it for you.

Jive, with vocals by Al Jarreau, needed the free-wheeling adventures of Suite Manhattan's Alan Scofield. Under Deborah Adams' tutelage it showed considerable technique but wandered in and out of focus and lost clear attention to its complex musico-social inspiration. It wouldn't have mattered so much but the dance design was obviously wedded to the Jarreau song.

Triad and Carmel by Ms. Ballard and N.Y.C. Impressions, by Ms. Adams showed commitment and desire, but gesture prevailed over expression despite floor crawling, eroticism and canonic imprecision, and not much more.

A significant constituency of dancianados gave loud cheer to the S.F. effort, and we hope all of them will return next year for a progress report.

On stage

Wharf Theater: presents Mary Chase's Pulitzer prize winning play Harvey, at 8:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday evenings and 8 p.m. on Sundays through July 3, on Old Fisherman's Wharf in Monterey.

The story is about the affable yet eccentric Elwood P. Dowd and his pal Harvey, an invisible six-foot rabbit. Jim Jensen plays the lead role and Florence Larsen is Elwood's sister, Veta. The niece, Myrtle, is played by Stacy Lininger. Chuck Thurman is director. Tickets are $6 and $8. For reservations, phone 372-2882.

Troupers of the Gold Coast: presents Tatters, the Pet of Squatters Gulch, at 8:30 p.m. Friday and Saturdays at California's historic First Theatre, located at Scott and Pacific Streets, Monterey.

Tickets are $4 adults, $3 teens and $2 for subteens, except on Saturdays. For reservations, phone 375-4916 after 1 p.m., Wednesday through Saturday.

Studio Theatre Restaurant: presents the Agatha Christie mystery drama Ten Little Indians, with dinner served at 7 p.m. and curtain at 8:30 p.m. Friday, June 17 at Dolores and Ocean Avenue in Carmel.

The title refers to the cluster of statuettes on the mantelpiece of a mysterious country home on an island off the coast of Devon and to the nursery rhyme embossed above them — telling how each little Indian met his death — until there were none and how eight assorted guests are invited for a weekend by a mysterious host. One by one the Indians disappear from the mantelpiece along with each guest's demise.

The Studio Theatre Restaurant, now in its 25th year at the same location, is open Thursday through Sunday with dinner and show beginning one hour earlier on Sundays. Price of the dinner and show is $22.50 and $10 for the show only. For reservations, phone 624-1661.

Community Coronary Club meets

The Community Coronary Club, a support group for people who have had heart problems and for their families, will discuss how good friends contribute to good health at their next meeting scheduled at 7 p.m. in classroom 1 of the new Outpatient Pavilion at Community Hospital in Carmel.

Backgammon

Accept the double?

By ALFRED SHEINWOLD

You, White, are on roll in the diagrammed position. Should you double? If you do, should Black accept the double?

Yes and yes.

You will fail to get your two men off only if you roll: 6-1, 1-6, 5-1, 1-5, 4-1, 1-4, 3-1, 1-3, 2-1, 1-2, 1-1, and 3-2. That comes to 13 of the 36 possible rolls. The odds are therefore 23 to 13 that you will get the men off.

If you encounter this kind of position often, for every 36 typical cases you will win 23 times and lose 13. At the end of 36 typical cases of this kind:

If you fail to double, you will wind up plus 10 points.

If you double, and Black resigns, you will wind up plus 36.

If you double, and Black accepts, you will wind up plus 20.

Black accepts the double, therefore, not because he hopes to win but because he would lose even more if he resigns. In positions of this kind he should accept the double whenever the odds against him are not worse than 3 to 1.

Would you like to have Alfred Sheinwold teach you how to play backgammon? A 12-lesson booklet will be on the way to you when you send $1 plus a stamped, self-addressed No. 10 envelope to Backgammon, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1000, Los Angeles, Calif. 90053.

George Flansberg, as General Mackenzie, harbors a few secrets of his own in the Agatha Christie mystery drama, Ten Little Indians which will open at 7 p.m. with dinner and curtain at 8:30 p.m. Friday, June 17, at the Studio Theatre Restaurant.

Mystery 'Ten Little Indians' opens at Studio Theatre

The Agatha Christie mystery drama, Ten Little Indians will open with dinner at 7 p.m. and curtain at 8:30 p.m. Friday, June 17 at the Studio Theatre Restaurant, located on Dolores Street between Ocean and Seventh Avenues in Carmel.

The story centers around a cluster of statuettes on the mantlepiece of an isolated country home located on an island off the coast of Devon in England and to the nursery rhyme embossed above them — telling how each little Indian met his death — until there were none.

Rick Bohrman and Shelly Gordon play the roles of Rogers and Ethel, his wife, who greet the invited guests at the country house. Shirley Fischer portrays Vera Claythorne, a young woman guest who was responsible for the drowning of a child.

George Spellvin plays Philip Lombard and John Houghton plays the part of Anthony Marston, a shallow, well-to-do young man who is uninterested in anyone but himself. Dale Wynn plays the part of William Blore, a middle-aged man who is guilty of perjury and who tries to leave the impression he is a gold magnate.

George Flansberg plays General Mackenzie and Gertrude Chappell plays Emily Brent. Roy Cole plays Sir Lawrence Wargrave, one of the most famous judges in England, responsible for sending more people to death than any other judge.

Dennis Fridkis plays Dr. Armstrong, a well known nerve specialist who gave up surgery for reasons he would prefer were not known.

The theater is open Thursday through Sunday. Dinner is served at 6 p.m. and curtain is at 7:30 p.m. on Sundays. Tickets for the dinner and show are $22.50 and $10 for the show only. For reservations, phone 624-1661.

Film Society offers comedy and madness

The Monterey Peninsula Film Society will present I Love You, in Portuguese with English subtitles, at 8:15 p.m. Thursday, June 16, Friday, June 17 and Saturday, June 18.

The Thin Line, in Hebrew with English subtitles, is scheduled at 8:15 p.m. on Wednesday, June 22 and Thursday, June 23. Both films will be shown in the Morse Auditorium of the Monterey Institute of International Studies, 425 Van Buren St., Monterey.

I Love You, directed by Arnaldo Jabor, with Sonia Braga and Paulo Cesat Pereio, is in color and rated R. Braga stars in this erotic comedy about the inseparability of love and sex. Her acting is great and her sexual presence is overpowering. She plays a career woman who pretends to be a prostitute during a weekend rendezvous with a Brazilian businessman.

The Thin Line is a pastoral rather than clinical; sensual rather than morbid; memoir rather than case-history story of a woman facing madness.

Tickets are $3.50 general admission, $2.75 for students, seniors and military and $2 for Film Society members and are available at the door.

Szmyd's work at Miner's

An exhibit of the latest works of Edward Szmyd is displayed at Miner's Gallery Americana, located at Lincoln Street and Sixth Avenue in Carmel.

For the past 25 years Szmyd has painted works that have gone into private collections, which has resulted in a somewhat limited exposure to the general public. Gallery Americana has become the exclusive gallery to present the artist's works.

Born in Pennsylvania during the depression years, Szmyd began to paint at the age of nine. By the time he was 15 years old, he was selling his paintings.

Largely self-taught, Szmyd manifests an ability to capture radiant interplay of light and shadow, and to infuse nature's vitality with a sense of tranquility. His style is refined, with a high sense of presence.

The quality and longevity of his work is most important to Szmyd. Each canvas is primed four times and the construction of his paintings is similar to the techniques of the Renaissance masters. Months may pass before he is satisfied to release a particular painting to the gallery.

His work includes landscapes in all seasons, gardens, greenhouses and architectural motifs, all executed in large scale. The scale of his work, combined with a technique that requires painting with small brushes, requires much discipline.

His compositions are classic yet his approach to the canvas yields a dynamism which enables one to feel more deeply the life force implicit in his work.

Established artists' latest works are shown as well as authoritative work by new, young artists. Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily. For more information, phone 624-5071.

A show of Simandle's watercolors opens at Zantman Art Galleries

A show of watercolors by Marilyn Simandle is scheduled to open with a reception for the artist from 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. Saturday, June 18 at the Zantman Art Galleries, located on Sixth Avenue at Mission Street in Carmel. The public is invited to attend the reception at no charge.

Ms. Simandle was introduced to the clients of Zantman Art Galleries last year with her first one-woman show in the Carmel galleries. The response was so enthusiastic that the show was nearly a sellout and the artist's new following of collectors expressed interest in seeing more of her work.

A successful exhibition of her watercolors in the Zantman Art Gallery in Palm Desert prompted her return to Carmel. Ms. Simandle is a steadily productive painter and has been able to assemble an impressive collection for this show.

Her colors are vibrant and her subjects have a romantic, nostalgic appeal according to her admirers and collectors.

Gallery hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. daily except Sunday when the hours are 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Zantman Art Galleries have two locations on Sixth Avenue in Carmel. For more information, phone 624-8314.

Friar Tuck's captures pony league opener

By CAROLINE WOODSON

The 1983 Pony League Carmel Youth Baseball season began May 16 with the Friar Tuck's Padres, coached by Michael Lucido and Mike Thomas, conquering the Kiwanis Tigers, coached by Frank Lucido Jr., 16-2.

Winning pitcher for the Padres was Simon Laguens. Simon pitched a two-hitter, and was helped by Mike Little and Beau Brushert, who each doubled. The 14 hits for the Padres saw Kerry Woodson and Laguens go three for four each and Lee Leidig and Randy Barker go two for four. Jason Anderson was the losing pitcher. Tiger hits were by Kris Sottosanti and Colin Jewett.

In their opener May 17, the Rotary Club Mets, coached by Pat Viray and Brad Dufur, reminded the Barnyard Merchant's As of their 1982 championship by racking up six runs to the solo score for the As. Greg Hinton took the pitching honors with David Stainbrook, with some help from Rick Dresser.

Greg Hinton hit a double and went two for four, while Jimmy Panetta was four for four for the Mets.

The Tigers fought the Carmel Host Lions, coached by Mark Rankin, to an 8-2 victory. Brennon Langley was the winning pitcher, and Rene Diaz took the loss for the Lions. The Lions' Chris Nolte hit a standup triple, and Jeff Roberts and Scott Weisner had doubles for the Tigers. The Tigers out-slugged the Lions with Jason Anderson, Colin Jewitt, Scott Weisner, and Eric Sincoff all two for four.

The Mets faced the Padres and gave them their first defeat. Darren Read was successful at the mound, while Kerry Woodson took the loss. Greg Hinton went three for four and Robbie Haller got a stand-up double.

The A's trounced the Tigers 14-4 in the first game of a double-header. Paul Wagstaff was the winning hurler, while Jeff Roberts threw for the Tigers. Mike Royster got a triple for the A's and he was two for four for the event. Warren Courtney was two for four and Paul Wagtaff was three for four. For the Tigers, Brennon Langley was the leading hitter. In the bottom half of the double header, the Padres, led by Simon Laguens, handed a loss to the Lions 9-4. Kerry Woodson led the way with three for four, followed by Lee Leidig and Tim Spaulding, both two for four.

In the second week of play, the Mets devoured the Lions 6-2. Lefty Kent Rullman picked up the win, by holding the Lions to only one hit. Rene Diaz suffered the loss for the Lions. Mets' Jimmy Panetta grabbed a double and was two for four. Greg Hinton was leading hitter for the Mets with three for four. Also sharing hitting honors were Robbie Haller for the Mets and Joshua Banks for the Lions. Greg Harrison was also outstanding in both fielding and hitting chores for the Mets.

The Padres crushed the A's 10-2. Lee Leidig picked up his first win in Pony Division with a two-hitter. Paul Wagstaff bore the A's loss. Jim Atkinson, Kerry Woodson, Tim Spaulding and Simon Laguens were all two for four, heading up the Padres' 11 hits. Hits for the A's came from David Stainbrook and Steve Fearn. Mike Cox and Eric Hanzelka put up a fine effort for the A's at catcher.

The Tigers, led by Colin Jewitt, spoiled the perfect record for the Mets by defeating them 4-2, thanks to the fine coaching of Frank Lucido Jr. Jewitt pitched a two-hitter for the Tigers. Ali Monroe, earned a double and was leading hitter for the Mets.

The Lions edged the A's 6-4 May 26, paced by pitcher Chris Nolte. As Jimmy Courtney, smacked a triple and was leading slugger for the A's. Joshua Banks ripped a double for the Lions as did As Eric Hanzelka. Lions' leading hitters at 2/3 were Rene Diaz and Chris Nolte. Nick Long picked up two RBIs for the Lions.

The Tigers surprised the Lions 5-2 May 31. Brennon Langley chalked up the win, while Chris Nolte took home the defeat. Andoni Kastros led off the Tiger assault followed by supreme efforts by Jason Anderson and Morgan Hill. Chris Stevenson scored on a wild pitch. Brian Young, Lions' catcher, also did an excellent job. The two runs by the Lions were scored by Daven Marasco and Brett Ledbetter, who stole home on passed balls. Anderson went two for four.

The Padres reversed position with the Mets and defeated them 7-4. Simon Laguens brought home the win, which insured the position for the Padres. Doubles were made by Mets' Jim Panetta and the Padres' Lee Leidig. Leidig and Victor Greco each went two for four. Greg Hinton, Victor Greco, Robbie Haller, and Kent Rullman each scored for the Mets. The Padre gained eight hits and no errors. Hinton's incredible speed enabled him to steal home.

The A's faced the Mets' Jim Courtney June 4. The breath-taking climax occurred in the bottom of the seventh when A's David Stainbrook's base hit allowed Eric Hanzelka to reach home and win the game 2-1. Jimmy Panetta and catcher Stainbrook kept the scoring to a minimum. Robbie Haller and Victor Greco both hit doubles; however it just wasn't enough.

The afternoon game saw the Padres once again triumph over the Tigers 4-1. Kerry Woodson smoked a four-hitter for the Padres as he tallied up his first win of the season, coached by Carmel High's Ace pitcher Mike Lucido. Colin Jewitt of the Tigers took the loss. Padres' Tim Spaulding went two for four and hit a double, as did Morgan Hill of the Tigers. Morgan's hit was a threat except for the fine fielding of Damon Maggiore. Hill went two for four for the Tigers and was their leading hitter. Andoni Kastros and Kris Sottosanti were also hitting well for the Tigers. Joe Leidig was two for four for the Padres.

The Padres were thrown to the Lions 6-3. Rene Diaz directed the Lions' win and Leidig took the Padre loss. Walks and errors hurt the Padres; however, a sixth inning rally led by Beau Brushert's home steal was simply "too little, too late." Catching was shared by Simon Laguens and Kerry Woodson while Jim Atkinson and Brushert shared hitting honors for the Padres. Fine base running was demonstrated by Chris Erben. Tim Lee handled the catching for the Lions.

CITY COUNCIL
CITY OF CARMEL-BY-THE-SEA
ORDINANCE NO. 83-14
AN URGENCY ORDINANCE PROHIBITING CONSTRUCTION OF STRUCTURES IN EXCESS OF SECOND STORY IN THE R-1 DISTRICT PENDING STUDY OF THE STRUCTURES IN THE CITY.

WHEREAS, the residential lots within the City are largely 4,000 square feet in size and some are smaller, and

WHEREAS, the unique charm of Carmel-by-the-Sea is significantly due to quaint, small, single story, small cottages, and

WHEREAS, there has been an alarming increase in the number of applications for design review of plans for two story houses in the month of May, and

WHEREAS, building permits will be requested if the plans are approved, and

WHEREAS, construction of large two story houses will have a substantial adverse impact on the character and quality that makes Carmel-by-the-Sea a special place,

WHEREAS, there is urgent need to protect the public health, safety and welfare by prohibiting construction of houses over one story in height pending a study by the Planning Commission and City Council for the purpose of deciding if more restrictive regulations on height and size of houses are needed, and

WHEREAS, Government Code Section 65858 provides for the enactment of an interim zoning ordinance for the purpose of maintaining the status quo while studying the proposed zoning changes.

NOW, THEREFORE, THE CITY COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF CARMEL-BY-THE-SEA DOES ORDAIN as follows:

Section One: Prohibition. During the time this Ordinance is in force the following prohibition shall apply:

No building shall be constructed in the R-1 District for which a design study with respect to size and bulk is required by Section 1310.20 of the Municipal Code.

Section Two: Suspension of Existing Zoning Code. Application of Section 1310.12a of the Municipal Code is suspended during the time this Ordinance is in effect.

Section Three: No building permits shall be issued for the construction of any buildings in the R-1 District for which a design review with respect to size and bulk is required by Section 1310.20 of the Municipal Code during the time this Ordinance is in effect with the following exceptions:

All persons having submitted applications for design study with respect to size and bulk pursuant to Municipal Code Section 1310.20 prior to June 1, 1983, are exempt from the application of this Ordinance.

Section Four: Violations. Any person, firm or corporation, whether as principal or agent, employee or otherwise violating or causing or permitting the violation of the provisions of this Ordinance is guilty of a misdemeanor. Any building erected contrary to the provisions of this Ordinance is hereby declared to be unlawful and a public nuisance and the City Attorney shall, upon order of the City Council, immediately commence action for the abatement and removal thereof. The remedy provided herein is cumulative and not exclusive.

Section Five: Effect of Violations. Should any person, firm or corporation violate the terms of this Ordinance and any action is authorized by the City Council or the City Attorney or is in fact filed for said violations, no other actions shall be taken on any applications filed by or on behalf of said person, firm or corporation until the litigation has been resolved.

Section Six: Severability. If any part of this Ordinance is found unenforceable such finding shall not affect the enforceability of any other part.

Section Seven: Urgency. This Ordinance is hereby declared to be an urgency Ordinance and necessary for the immediate preservation and enjoyment of the public safety, health and welfare. The facts constituting the urgency are as follows: Lots in Carmel-by-the-Sea are very small. Many single story houses have been built on the lots. The construction of two story houses built to the maximum coverage and height is having a drastic impact on the character and quality of the residential district. The usual number of applications for design study of two story houses is about two per month. In 1982, the average was 2.2 per month. In 1983 to date the average is 2.8 applications per month and in the month of May eight applications were received. It is believed that the construction of so many two story houses, and two story additions or expansions thereto, will pose a threat to the public health, safety and welfare and that it is necessary that the status quo be maintained while a study is carried out for the purpose of determining if new zoning regulations should be adopted limiting the number of stories of buildings in the R-1 District.

Section Eight: Effective Date. This Ordinance shall take effect immediately upon its adoption by a 4/5ths vote of the City Council of the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea and shall remain in effect for forty-five (45) days.

A public hearing before the City Council shall be set for July 19, 1983, at 7:30 p.m., for the purpose of determining if this Ordinance shall be extended for ten (10) months and fifteen (15) days.

PASED AND ADOPTED BY THE CITY COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF CARMEL-BY-THE-SEA this 7th day of June, 1983, by the following roll call vote:

AYES: COUNCIL MEMBERS: Arnold, Maradei, Stephenson, Townsend.

NOES: COUNCIL MEMBERS: None.

ABSENT: COUNCIL MEMBERS: Lloyd.

Public notice

PUBLIC NOTICE
NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the Planning Director of the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea, California, has made an initial study of the following project and found that it will not have a significant effect upon the Environment.

NEGATIVE DECLARATION
PROJECT: McFarland Building
N/W Corner San Carlos & 6th
Block 56, Lots 15, 17 & 19
Carmel-by-the-Sea, California 93921

The project proposes to demolish the existing service station leaving the one story building containing an art gallery. The one story building is proposed to be remodeled and a new structure with parking beneath built in the location of the service station. Total floor area for commercial use is proposed to be 8,600 square feet with an additional 900 square feet of office use. 500 square feet of floor area is for service to the building.

ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT
An assessment of the project was made on the basis of an environmental questionnaire which was completed in accordance with the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA). The guidelines for Environmental Review are found in Public Resources Code Division 13 as amended in January, 1981. The review indicates that the project will have no significant effect on the environment.

REASONS FOR SUPPORTING FINDINGS
That the commercial spaces proposed are in keeping with the general area and sufficient parking is provided on site. The proposed complex is in scale with existing development in the area. The present service station has two large driveways which will be eliminated and an increase in parking both on and off-site will occur.

NOTICE IS FURTHER GIVEN that written comments will be received by the Planning Department from June 17, 1983 through July 1, 1983, regarding environmental review of this project. The City Council of the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea will hold a public hearing regarding this Negative Declaration at 7:30 P.M. Tuesday July 5, 1983, in the Council Chambers of the City Hall, East side of Monte Verde between Ocean Avenue and Seventh Avenue.

Date: June 7, 1983.

Public Notice

PUBLIC NOTICE

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the Planning Director of the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea, California, has made an initial study of the following project and found that it will not have a significant effect upon the Environment.

NEGATIVE DECLARATION

PROJECT: Walls Residential Apartment Project

W/s Junipero between 4th & 5th
Block 49, Lots 17 & 19
Carmel-by-the-Sea, California 93921.

The project proposes to remove an existing single family dwelling and to construct on the site a two story apartment building with six parking spaces under the structure. The apartments in the structure consist of 4 one-bedroom units of 653 square feet each and 2 two-bedroom units of 1,240 square feet each. The apartments are proposed for permanent housing use.

ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT

An assessment of the project was made on the basis of an environmental questionnaire which was completed in accordance with the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA). The guidelines for Environmental Review are found in Public Resources Code Division 13 as amended in January, 1981. The review indicates that the project will have no significant impact on the environment.

REASONS FOR SUPPORTING FINDINGS

The six apartments proposed will meet housing needs within the community and meet the community's goal of having apartments in this specific area. The project has a density less than the adjacent apartment building and provides sufficient parking on site for the apartment's needs. Water saving devices are required for the development and energy conservation measures will be taken. The new structure will be compatible with existing buildings in the area.

NOTICE IS FURTHER GIVEN that written comments will be received by the Planning Department from June 17, 1983 to July 1, 1983, regarding environmental review of this project. The City Council of the City of Carmel-by-the-Sea will hold a public hearing regarding this Negative Declaration at 7:30 P.M., Tuesday July 5, 1983, in the Council Chambers of the City Hall, East side of Monte Verde between Ocean and Seventh avenues.

WE'VE GOT A PROBELM!!!!

We have a house for sale which is a very fine buy.....but it has one big problem. The fireplace is in the wrong place! For some reason the builder put a gorgeous stone fireplace next to the refrigerator in the kitchen. It is fine if you are washing the dishes, but to see the fire from the living room takes a real effort. The rest of the house, three bedrooms, two excellent baths, family room, hot tub, decks, ocean views, etc. is a real winner.....but we need an imaginative buyer who can figure out how to solve the fireplace problem. The owner is most anxious to sell and invites all offers. Call today for a showing!
